Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring of the provision of services for mentally handicapped people is taking place in Scotland in line with Her Majesty's Government's response to the second report of the Social Services Committee of Session 1984-85.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report of the Social Services Committee (Session 1984-85) and the Government's response referred to the provision of services in England. As far as Scotland is concerned, the provision of services by health boards for mentally handicapped people is monitored as part of the wider monitoring of boards' implementation of the priorities for the Scottish Health Service as set out in the report "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties". The Scottish Home and Health Department has nearly completed the second round of that monitoring.

As regards social work, local authorities' proposals for capital expenditure are considered as part of the wider arrangements for determining capital allocations. Statistical returns showing the development of residential and other schemes are received and published annually. There also are arrangements for assessing progress by local authorities in the development of particular schemes.

Salmon Fishing (Rates)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate, by local authority area, the loss of non-domestic rates revenue from salmon fishings resulting from Government amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Lang: The detailed information requested is not available. The effect of the provisions for de-rating salmon fishings will depend on the creation of district salmon fishery boards in areas where these do not exist at present, and on the separate entry in the valuation roll of salmon fishing rights which are not so entered at present.

Electricity (Privatisation)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in discussions with the Scottish electricity boards on privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have given careful consideration to the steps necessary to reorganise the industry to create two companies for privatisation as proposed in the White Paper "The Privatisation of the Scottish Electricity Industry". In these discussions I have borne uppermost in mind the objectives stated in the White Paper of minimising disruption within the industry and ensuring the companies are viable and satisfactory balanced in operational terms and in terms of future profitability and prospects.

I have concluded that the nuclear assets will be shared between the successor companies to the present boards in relation to their relative size, through a subsidiary jointly and exclusively owned by the parent companies.

In order to ensure that the South company receives a satisfactory proportion of flexible and quick response capacity, the pumped storage station at Cruachan will transfer from the North company to the South company, and there will be contractual arrangements whereby the South company purchases hydro output from the North, based on 200MW of capacity on a firm basis. It will be open to the companies to contract for further supplies on a fully commercial basis.

In order to ensure that each company has the full range of fossil fuels generation available to it there will be contractual arrangements to make 600MW of coal-fired capacity available to the North and to make 50 per cent. of the oil/gas-fired capacity at Peterhead available to the South.

Finally, there will be arrangements for the sharing of spinning and standing reserves which will ensure that the operating costs of the system are minimised.

The benefits of nuclear power will therefore remain available to all Scottish consumers, both companies will have access to the full range of fossil fuel sources and the benefits of hydro generation (in terms of its low marginal costs) will be retained for the customers of the successor company to the NSHEB. These arrangements will ensure that two companies are created which are fully capable of operation on an independent basis but which will have strong commercial incentives to co-operate to minimise overall costs. The companies will be fully viable on the basis of their existing customer base and I do not therefore propose any adjustment of the present boundaries. New arrangements will also be devised to ensure that both companies have equitable opportunities to export power to England and Wales over the interconnector.

Negotiations are now proceeding between the boards on the detailed terms of the contracts. In addition, discussions continue on a range of other matters concerning privatisation with a view to legislation being introduced at the earliest opportunity.

ENERGY

Offshore Petroleum Licensing Round

4. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he is able to announce the arrangements for the 11th offshore petroleum licensing round.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I am now able to give further details of the arrangements for offshore petroleum production licences to be issued in 1989. A total of 212 blocks or part-blocks will be available for licensing, distributed as follows:

	Number
Northern North Sea	47
Faroes/Shetland Area	10
Orkney/Shetland Area	12
Hebridean Platform	7
Outer Moray Firth	17
Forth Approaches	2
Central North Sea	48
Irish Sea/Manx Basin	19
Southern North Sea	43
English Channel	5

I have arranged for a full list of the blocks offered in the round to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. As in the past, it has been necessary in the case of many of the blocks to specify additional conditions which the operator will be required to observe when undertaking activity on the licence. These are designed to take into account the concerns of defence, fishing, environmental and navigational interests.

I have laid before the House new regulations under which licences will be offered and awarded as a result of this licensing round. The regulations will come into force on 4 August and a formal notice inviting applications will be published in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes on 5 August. Applications will be returnable on 7 or 8 February 1989.

Licence awards will be made at the discretion of the Secretary of State, on the basis of financial and technical competence, and the contribution the applicant is prepared to make towards expeditious, thorough and efficient exploration and development of the oil and gas resources of the United Kingdom continental shelf. All applicants will be interviewed on their plans for the acreage for which they are seeking a licence and the exploration work commitments they would be prepared to make if a licence is awarded to them. The safety record of applicants and their current arrangements in respect to safety will, as before, be factors taken into account in deciding the award of licences. Guidance on the format of applications, and the information required, will be available from my Department as soon as the Gazette notice has been published.

Except in the case of a few blocks in deep water areas, licences will be issued on standard terms, which will provide for an initial period of six years, during which the licensee will be expected to complete any work programme agreed as a condition of the award. The applicant must then relinquish 50 per cent. of the licence area. Thereafter he may retain the remaining 50 per cent. for a period of up to 30 years. If, however, after 12 years of the 30-year term no field development has been approved the licensee will be required to surrender the licence, unless the Secretary of State decides otherwise.

Licences awarded in deep water areas will be similar in all respects except that the licence will last a total of 48 years. The initial term will be eight years, followed by a mandatory 50 per cent. relinquishment of the acreage. If after a further 16 years no development has been approved the licensee will be required to surrender the licence, unless the Secretary of State decides otherwise.

I have introduced the new provisions in order to take further steps towards ensuring that acreage is not left unworked for long periods, as has sometimes happened in the past. In other respects the model clauses incorporated into licences will be similar to those incorporated into licences issued as a result of the 10th offshore round. Licence rentals will remain unchanged from those set at the time of the 10th round.

Consultants

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the cost to his Department of employing management or computer consultants for each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Parkinson: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1983-84	313,000
1984-85	296,000
1985-86	72,000
1987-88	279,000

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract extant in his Department as at 1 January 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Parkinson: The following consultancy contract were extant as at 1 January 1987:

Consultancy	Subject
Price Waterhouse Associates	Database development for oil and gas reservoir monitoring.
Z & S Ltd.	Computerised display of geological data.
Information Builders UK Ltd.	Supply of advisory services for "Focus" computer software system.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will arrange urgent interviewing of relatives telephoned by deceased crew of Piper Alpha about gas leaks prior to the disaster.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have already made the arrangements to which the hon. Member refers. The technical investigation team from my Department and the Health and Safety Executive has also called publicly for anyone who believes they have information which may be relevant to the cause of the disaster to contact it. A press statement has been issued and advertisements are being placed in local newspapers.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will include in the terms of reference for the public inquiry into the Piper Alpha oil rig disaster consideration of any changes in the way in which oil is processed once it is piped ashore.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 14 July 1988.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there was on the Piper Alpha platform an emergency shut-off valve on each of the gas import/export pipelines; and where those valves were located.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On Piper Alpha there were three gas import-export pipelines. All were fitted with emergency shutdown valves which were located near the top of the pipeline risers on the platform.

Renewable Energy Sources

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what investigations his Department has carried out into the reliability of industrial crop growing as a permanent renewable energy source; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department, within its biofuels research and development programme, is continuing to evaluate the prospects for energy forestry in terms of its practicality and economics. In addition, earlier studies were carried out into the prospects of growing catch crops and also the harvesting of natural vegetation but these proved to be unattractive in economic terms.

The forestry programme and been reviewed in the publication ETSU R32, "The Potential for Wood as a Fuel in the UK", and the catch crop work in ETSU R35, The potential for catch crops and natural vegetation as fuel in the UK. Arrangements have been made to place both documents in the House of Commons Library.

UKAEA (Inquiry)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be given full access to the complete Manley report of 1984 during the forthcoming inquiry into the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority;

(2) whether the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be given full and open access during its forthcoming inquiry into the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to (a) the Fitzsimmons report (1983) into financial mechanisms used by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, (b) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority FBR report (1983) into the future of the fast breed reactor, (c) the Peat, Marwick and Mitchell report (1982) into the efficiency and economy within the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and (d) the internal DEA report (1982) into the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority fast reactor programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department will give careful consideration to any request from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to see departmental documents.

Grant-aided Surveys Scheme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many energy consultants have made representations to him regarding the Energy Efficiency Office's announcement withdrawing the grant-aided surveys scheme; how many of those consultants objected to the changes; and how many supported the decision.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department wrote to some 400 consultants who had carried out a survey under the energy efficiency survey scheme to notify them of the closure of the scheme and the reasons for that decision. We have received only three written representations in response. All three argued against the decision.

British Coal

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to privatise the coal trading interests of British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is our ambition that all activities of British Coal should be returned in due course to the private sector. The possibility of privatising British Coal's peripheral activities is kept under regular review.

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on British Coal involvement in the private sector.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal's major interests in private sector companies are set out at page 43 of the corporation's report and accounts for 1987-88. It is British Coal's intention to continue to pursue the disposal of peripheral activities where suitable opportunities present themselves. The Government welcome this.

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the proposed financial arrangements for the purchase of British Fuels Ltd. by British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have made it clear thatfurther acquisitions of businesses by British Coal, where my approval is required, will be agreed only if it is likely to help achieve greater efficiency. The recent increase in British Coal's stake in British Fuels Ltd. from 20 per cent. to 50 per cent. did not require my approval. It did not require any injection of cash on British Coal's part, and it left the company in the private sector. British Coal have given assurances that trading between them and British Fuels Ltd. will continue to be on an arm's-length basis.

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of the British Coal Corporation's external financing requirement for 1988-89.

Mr. Parkinson: I announced on 26 May that I would be reviewing the corporation's external financing limit for 1988-89, in the light of the higher than expected expenditure on redundancy lump sums incurred in the closing days of 1987-88 but actually paid in 1988-89. After taking account of some offsetting savings I have now agreed that the external financing limit should be increased by £80 million from £670 million to £750 million. In reflection of this and other minor changes, the external financing now envisaged is made up as follows:

Restructuring grant		207	116
Other non-deficit grants		270	273
Net borrowing:
Voted loans (including refinancing of existing debt)	1,800
Net other loans repaid	(1,527)	273	281
		750	670

This increase will be met from the reserve and does not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on the Energy Efficiency Office of 9 June, Official Report, column 635, if he will outline the evidence of wide public appreciation of the potential value of energy surveys upon which his decision was based.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Our day-to-day contacts, many of which are through the Department's regional energy efficiency officers, indicated a general increased awareness of the value of surveys. We also took account of research undertaken by the European Commission in the north-west and north-east of England, and the evidence of our follow-up inquiries of applicants who had benefited from grant-aided surveys.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what instructions or guidance his Department has given with regard to the construction of accommodation modules on oil and gas installations, and in particular with regard to the materials with which these modules are constructed; when these instructions or guidelines were issued; and if they were made retroactive.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Guidance is issued to the offshore industry generally, through a number of documents which my department publishes. These include "Offshore Installations: Guidance on design and construction" (published in 1984), "Offshore Installations: Guidance on fire fighting equipment" (published in 1980) and "Offshore Installations: Guidance on life saving appliances" (published in 1978).

Amendments to, and new editions of, guidance documents are not intended to apply automatically to installations which have a certificate of fitness. However, operators are advised to design all new constructions and to carry out alterations and repairs in accordance with the latest guidance; and, if there are any overriding safety requirements, operators are advised to apply the new guidance to existing offshore installations immediately.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what instructions or guidance he has given to the operators of oil and gas installations concerning the location of emergency shut-off valves on pipelines to and from oil and gas installations; when these instructions or guidelines were issued; and if they were made retroactive.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Operators of oil and gas installations receive guidance from the Department of Energy through its "Submarine Pipelines Guidance Notes", which were last published in October 1984. These require that the pipeline should be equipped with an emergency shut-down system with shut-down valves positioned to ensure that as much of the pipeline as possible may be isolated in an emergency. Guidance is not made retroactive.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Kyle and Maclay Railway Lines

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to privatise the Kyle and Maclay railway lines.

Mr. David Mitchell: No, and this applies also to the route to Mallaig.

British Rail

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss future investment proposals to reduce overcrowding on InterCity services.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. InterCity investment is a commercial matter for British Rail. I am always happy to approve any investment with a sound financial return.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss future investment proposals for services between Cardiff and Crewe with regard to reducing overcrowding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no plans to do so; this is essentially a management matter for British Rail. I have, however, asked the chairman to bring forward proposals for loading standards for the provincial sector, and I look forward to receiving these as soon as possible.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statisticl results of such monitoring.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State reported to the House last year we have taken the following initiatives:

For taxi and hire car operators:
—A thorough review of the legislation has been started.

For bus, coach and lorry operators:
—We have proposed dropping a number of superfluous items from annual roadworthiness tests.

For international hauliers:
—Considerable success in negotiations to increase lorry permit quotas for Germany, France, Italy and Spain.

For caterers:
—British Rail are providing increased opportunity to tender for on-train trolley services.

For business men with roadside premises:
—We have consulted about revising local highway authorities' powers over planning applications, with a view to changes later this year.

For airline operators:
—The EC Council of Ministers has agreed on a package of liberalising measures, as a first step towards completion of the iternal market in 1992.

For Shipowners:
—The law on marine pilotage has been reformed and simplified, we have consulted about simplifying crew accommodation regulations; and provision has been made in the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 to enable further pressure to be put on EC member states to move towards liberalisation of shipping cabotage.

For MOT testing garages:
—The revised conditions of appointment for MOT testing garages have been reviewed.

The transport and road research laboratory monitors the effects of bus deregulation under the Transport Act 1985. Other measures do not lend themselves in the same way to the use of statistical performance indicators.

Trailers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action to ensure that trailers registered abroad and entering the United Kingdom carrying imported goods are required to meet the standards needed for Department of Transport certificates required of British registered trailers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: If the hon. Member is referring to plating and test certificates, large trailers from other EC member states must be tested annually, to comply with EC roadworthiness directive 77/143. Foreign trailers must not exceed United Kingdom maximum limits on axle and gross weights. Basic safety standards are also applied by international conventions. These provisions are enforced by checks of vehicles at ports and at the roadside.

Road Improvements (North-West)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he is giving to a greater emphasis on road improvement schemes in urban areas; and if he will make a statement about the implication of such schemes for the north-west.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Great emphasis is already given to road improvement schemes in urban areas. They stimulate the development of new industries and create new job opportunities. In urban areas in the north west, national road schemes worth about £400 million have been recently completed or are under construction or planned, and about £125 million of local road schemes will benefit from transport supplementary grant. This investment in the north-west's highways infrastructure is a visible sign of the Government's commitment to the regeneration of the region's urban heartlands.

M4 (Maintenance)

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will take steps to minimise the number of night-time closures made necessary by the maintenance works due to take place from the end of July between junctions 3 and 1 on the M4 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. We shall try to do all these repairs over one weekend to keep any inconvenience to a minimum. After consultation with the police we have decided to close the London bound (eastbound) carriageway of the M4 between junction 3 at The Parkway and junction 1, east of Chiswick roundabout for a period between 9 pm on Friday 29 July and 6 am on Monday 1 August. This is to facilitate essential carriageway resurfacing work and the replacement of waterproofing on the bridge decks.

If all goes well, we hope to re-open this section of the motorway to traffic by lunchtime on Sunday 31 July.

Wide publicity will be given to the closure. It will be supported by signs to keep motorists fully informed. Delays to traffic are likely to be significant. We are advising motorists to allow plenty of time for their journeys. If the weather seems likely to prevent the work being done, no start would be made and it would then be necessary to transfer the work to a subsequent weekend.

Chapter 2 Jet Aircraft

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take in the light of the recent European civil aviation conference recommendation on chapter 2 jet aircraft.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government undertook in the airports policy White Paper of 1985 to work towards the eventual phasing out of chapter 2 aircraft. It was recognised that this would be a long and expensive process. Since then we have continued to play an active role with ECAC and thus welcome, as an important first step, its recommendation to ban the addition of nearly all chapter 2 jet aircraft to member state's registers from 1 October 1990. To give effect to the recommendation in the United Kingdom will require legislation. The necessary statutory instrument will be introduced next year.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take in the light of the reports on the Channel tunnel and airports policy launched by the North of England Regional Consortium, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 12 July 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has read these reports with interest and I have commented on some aspects of NOERC's recommendations on airports policy in my answers of 12 July to the right hon. Gentleman.

The Government are already on record as supporting the provision of a second terminal at Manchester when this can be justified by demand and return on capital. Public sector borrowing restrictions apply to regional airports only so long as they remain under the control of local authorities. The North of England Regional Consortium may wish to send copies of the airports policy document to the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority in light of the CAA review referred to in my answer to the right hon. Gentleman of 12 July, column 145.

As far as the Channel tunnel is concerned, the issues raised in the consortium's report are mainly for the British Railways Board, to whom I understand the consortium has already sent a copy. My hon. Friend the Minister of State has in the past discussed with the consortium its concerns about the impact of the tunnel on the north of England.

ENVIRONMENT

Rural Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he will take to ensure the adequate provision of housing for rent and for purchase at affordable prices for people in rural areas.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend set out his proposals for increasing the supply of low cost housing in rural areas in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 5 July, Official Report, column 548. No further steps are planned at present.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many employees have been appointed to the shadow National Rivers Authority by the water authorities; to what positions; and at what salaries.

Mr. Moynihan: Until the establishment of the National Rivers Authority, water authorities retain statutory responsibility for all their functions, including those that will pass to the National Rivers Authority. All appointments made by individual water authorities are for jobs as employees of the water authority concerned.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in his proposals to privatise the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on 12 May, Official Report, at column 199.

Homelessness

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities bid for extra housing investment programme allocations in 1988-89, to provide additional accommodation for the homeless, under the initiative he announced on 17 June; what additional housing investment allocation each local authority bid for under this initiative; and how many units of accommodation each local authority estimated would result, comprising (a) local authority dwellings refurbished, (b) hostel places provided by local authorities, (c) hostel places provided by housing associations and (d) other dwellings or places provided by local authorities.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 23 June, Official Report, at columns 701-706. My Department did not specifically seek additional bids beyond those listed in that reply. However, four authorities submitted further proposals, which are listed in the following table.

Authority	Bid £k	Estimated additional units of accommodation: Local authority dwellings refurbished	Local authority hostel places	Housing association hostel places	Other
Eastern Region
Merseyside Task Force
Wirral	170	0	0	40	0
Northern Region
Langbaurgh-on-Tees	100	7	0	0	0

Water Directives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what legal actions his Department has initiated in cases where water authorities have been found not to be complying with European Economic Community directives; and under what powers.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him on this subject on 11 July, Official Report, column 40.

Water Supply (Disconnections)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of domestic consumers who have been disconnected from their water supply in each water authority in England, Scotland and Wales in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested by the hon. Member has been collected by the Department for water authorities only since 1984-85 as part of the water authorities' annual charges returns. Information on statutory water company disconnections is not collected by the Department.

Numbers of disconnections in Wales and Scotland are matters for the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland respectively.

The figures are as follows:

Authority	Household disconnections for non-payment: 1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
North West	110	238	457	448
Northumbrian	70	59	300	480
Severn Trent	650	1,074	1,000	932
Yorkshire	25	189	293	560
Anglian	218	774	2,268	1,586
Thames	788	225	576	1,594
Southern	115	1,249	1,152	1,164
Wessex	0	0	0	32
South West	76	404	404	324
England	2,052	4,212	6,450	7,120

Housing and Population Statistics

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give, for every county, borough and metropolitan district council in England, the total area, number of dwellings, population and population density.

Mrs. Roe: Following is the latest available information:

Estimates of area, Population, Population Density and Dwelling Stock; Non-Metropolitan Counties, London Boroughs and Metropolitan Districts in England.

	[1]Area April 1987 (hectares)	[2]Population mid 1986 (number)	[3]Population Density (persons per ha)	[4]Dwellings April 1987 (number)

River Mersey

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made on the clean up programme for the River Mersey.

Mr. Moynihan: Substantial progress has been made in laying the foundations for the success of the mersey basin campaign. Apart from other developments upstream direct benefits will flow from the completion by the North water authority of new sewage treatment facilities, specifically at Sandon dock, Liverpool and on the Wirrall. Significant landward developments have also taken place at Albert dock, Salford quays and Wigan pier. Phase I of the Mersey basin programme attracted some £66 million from the European regional development fund and phase II which envisages some £73 million ERDF is now before the European Commission for decision. A voluntary sector network has been set up to ensure effective participation by the community and has attracted £115,000 of private sector sponsorship for specific project support. Efforts continue to bring all sectors into this long term campaign.

Gravel Extraction

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards appeals against refusal of planning permission for gravel extraction in green belt and environmentally sensitive rural areas; and what guidance he issues to local authorities in respect of such development.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's policy on mineral extraction in green belts is set out in planning policy guidance note 2. It recognises that minerals can be worked only where they are found and that their extraction need not be incompatible with green belt objectives, provided that high environmental standards are maintained and that the site is well restored. There is no specific policy on mineral extraction in environmentally sensitive rural areas, but general guidance may be found in minerals planning guidance note 1.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to prevent the importing of polychlorinated biphenyls into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Waste substances containing polychlorinated biphenysl are imported into the United Kingdom for safe disposal by specialist high-temperature incineration. Such trade is in the best interests of environmental protection. Polychlorinated biphenyls cannot be sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to prevent the production of polychlorinated biphenyls in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Polychlorinated biphenyls are not manufactured anywhere in the United Kingdom. The Control of Pollution (Supply and Use of Injurious Substances) Regulations 1986 prohibit their sale.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to whether the three-day period allowed for waste disposal authorities to check the contents of cargoes of imported toxic waste is sufficient to allow a proper chemical analysis of such cargoes.

Mr. Moynihan: The three-day period is intended to give notice to waste disposal authorities so that they can monitor and verify the arrival of a consignment at its intended disposal facilities. Producers of special wastes, including importers, must certify the composition of consignments and disposers must ensure that the composition complies with site licence conditions. Analysis should be undertaken by these parties in order to comply with their obligations, and is not constrained by the three day period. Waste disposal authorities, as part of their enforcement duties, may check on the composition at any time.

Water (Privatisation)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that those consumers paying water rates be offered, in a paper sent to them together with their accounts, a priority opportunity to buy shares in their local water authority on privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: Decisions have yet to be taken on ways of encouraging customers of water authorities to invest in the successor companies. I am grateful for my hon. Friend's suggestion, and I shall keep it in mind.

Building Contracts

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish recommendations following the report of the working party on building industry contracts set up by the Minister for Housing in January 1987; whether the report included comments about the transferability of contractors' guarantees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The report of the working party will be published shortly. It will include a section on the operation of guarantee schemes and codes of practice in the building industry.

Multiple Occupation

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be consulting local authorities on proposals to strengthen their powers to deal with houses in multiple occupation as announced by the Minister for Housing and Planning the hon. Member for Bristol, West on 9 June.

Mr. Waldegrave: Copies of a consultation document have been sent to every local authority in England, and to organisations and individuals who are interested in HMO problems. I have also arranged for copies to be placed in the libraries. The paper proposes that there should be a revised definition of an HMO; a fitness standard including means of escape from fire; that the management regulations should apply to all HMOs instead of simply to those on which a management order has been served; that the control order process should be simplified, and that local authorities should be able to charge a fee for registration schemes. Depending on the results of consultation, appropriate amendments to the existing legislation will be made in the next Housing Bill. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be consulting the Welsh local authorities separately.

PRIME MINISTER

Southern Africa (IRA)

Q7. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has on recent meetings between representatives of the Irish Republican Army and southern African terrorist organisations; and what assessment she has made of the implications of such meetings for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards terrorism.

The Prime Minister: I can assure my hon. Friend that any information will be thoroughly investigated.

Petitions

Q15. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what is her policy on the way in which petitions to the Government are responded to.

The Prime Minister: Petitions presented to No. 10 Downing street receive replies as appropriate from No. 10 or the Government Department concerned.

Kent

Q62. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Kent.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Common Fisheries Policy

Q90. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government to ensure that the introduction of the single European market will not affect the structure of the common fisheries policy, with particular reference to access agreements and the total allowable catch system; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The common fisheries policy was agreed in 1983. It lasts at least 20 years with a mid-term review. The Government are wholly committed to the structure of the CFP which represents a very fair deal for the United Kingdom. However we recognise that the single European Market may require adjustments such as harmonising fish hygiene regulations to facilitate trade but these will not affect the basic agreement including arrangements for access and total allowable catches.

Bristol

Q113. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to pay an official visit to Bristol.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Official Information

Q149. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether, in the light of the Government's proposals for reforming the Official Secrets Acts, she has any plans to issue new guidance to (a) civil servants and (b) Ministers of the Crown about the rules and procedures governing the disclosure of official information and the mechanism for determining whether a particular proposed disclosure is authorised; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As the White Paper on reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 made clear, once new legislation is in place it will be necessary to amend the conduct rules for Crown servants on the disclosure of official information, in consultation with the Civil Service trade unions.

Persian Gulf

Q152. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to the Persian Gulf.

The Prime Minister: I hope to stop over briefly in the Gulf on the way to and from Australia, but have no plans at present to pay an official visit.

Singapore

Q164. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about her forthcoming visit to Singapore.

The Prime Minister: I shall be visiting Singapore briefly on my way to Australia at the end of the month and shall be having talks with Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew.

Mr. Nelson Mandela

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she has sent birthday greetings to Mr. Nelson Mandela on his 70th birthday; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: On 15 July my right hon. and learned Friend, the Foreign Secretary, issued a statement on behalf of the Government which read as follows:

Mr. Nelson Mandela has now spent 26 years in prison. The British Government have long called for his immediate and unconditional release, and indeed the release of all political prisoners. On the eve of Mr. Mandela's 70th birthday, we renew that call.

The release of Mr. Mandela is crucial to the prospects for peaceful change within South Africa. It would be an important gesture of reconciliation by the South African Government and would help to create a climate of confidence in which dialogue across the racial divide on South Africa's future would become possible in the context of a suspension of violence on all sides.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Lebanon

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian assistance Her Majesty's Government have provided recently to the Lebanon.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have recently provided from the aid programme two grants totalling £1·2 million. The first is for £1 million to UNICEF for its health care and water supply projects in Lebanon; the other is for £200,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross for its 1988 emergency appeal for Lebanon. This appeal covers a range of protection, tracing and relief activities. Our latest contribution is part of Her Majesty's Government's long and continuing commitment to Red Cross operations in Lebanon.

THE ARTS

Public Libraries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make it his policy to accept representations on his Green Paper entitled "Financing Our Public Library Service" submitted after the closing date of 30 June.

Mr. Luce: The work of analysing the responses has now begun. I will try to take account of any late entries received during July, but that must be the end. The consultative period lasted four months.

Marketing

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he is now ready to make the further announcement on marketing the arts referred to in the arts debate on 20 May, Official Report, column 1204.

Mr. Luce: The Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts (ABSA), in collaboration with IBM and seven other major businesses, have today announced details of a new organisation. It is to be known as "Business in the Arts", which they are setting up to encourage business men to put their talents and professional skills at the disposal of arts organisations on a voluntary basis, to improve the quality of business management in the arts. An important aspect of this initiative will be the use of business training schemes to support arts managers and the extension of the links with universities and colleges. The organisation will be run by ABSA and funded by the eight businesses initially. I am delighted to support this extremely worthwhile initiative and have agreed to contribute £25,000 from my marketing budget for each of the first two years in recognition of the funds put up by the business community.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inland Revenue (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how long replies to Inland Revenue queries made in Welsh take to process in relation to the equivalent requests in English.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The times are normally the same for inquiries—whether in Welsh or English—made to Inland Revenue offices in Wales. Inquiries in Welsh to offices outside Wales may take longer to deal with than those made in English as it will normally be necessary to obtain translations.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that every letter sent by a person in Wales to the Inland Revenue which is written in Welsh will have a reply in the Welsh language.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue's practice is that inquiries written in Welsh to its tax and collection offices in Wales will receive a reply in that language. Where inquiries in Welsh are made to offices elsewhere in the United Kingdom, it would be the practice to try to provide a reply in Welsh.

Economic and Finance Control

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lilley: The Ecofin Council met in Brussels on 11 July. I represented the United Kingdom. The Council discussed the Commission's second quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community and broadly endorsed the Commission's analysis. The Commission made a procedural statement on indirect tax approximation, but substantive discussion was postponed to the informal meeting of Finance Ministers in September. The Council agreed by qualified majority a common position on a directive on major shareholdings which sets requirements for the disclosure of holdings in EC companies.

Industrial Dredging

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what restrictions have already been applied to the maximum depth at which industrial dredging can be conducted; and what guidelines he has issued.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 18 July 1988]: No general guidelines have been issued by the Crown Estate Commissioners. Each licence application is dealt with on a site-by-site basis. A maximum dredging depth will be imposed in the light of scientific advice in order to ensure that the surface of the seabed remains fundamentally the same as it was before dredging commenced.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what restrictions have already been applied to ban the discharge of fine material from industrial dredgers if adjacent shellfish or spawning grounds might be blanketed; and what guidelines he has issued.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 18 July 1988]: No general guidelines have been issued by the Crown Estate Commissioners, but the screening on board of dredged material is strictly controlled, especially where dredging takes place close to fishing grounds. Appropriate conditions will be contained in the licence granted by the Crown Estate Commission.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Military Equipment (Shippers)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the nature of the communications between Her Majesty's Government and shippers of military equipment, in particular Sea Cadet missiles, as to the responsibility of shippers to ensure that such equipment does not pass through or arrive in the hands of Soviet interests; and to which other persons or organisations such communications have been directed.

Mr. Alan Clark: Exports of military equipment are controlled under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987. Where goods are subject to control it is the responsibility of the person presenting the goods for export to ensure that an export licence is produced to Customs and Excise and that the goods are exported in accordance with the descriptions on, and conditions of, the licence.

Communications between Her Majesty's Goverment and exporters or shippers on matters relating to the export of military equipment would take the form of advice, or requests for information, clarification or undertakings, in connection with the licensing process.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The prime objectives of the DTI are to stimulate individual initiative and enterprise, and to help businesses to improve their efficiency by spreading knowledge of best practice and by cutting red tape. We aim to promote the development of all businesses, large and small, but we recognise that small firms need particular help if they are to achieve their full potential. This is reflected both in the organisation of the Department and in the range of services that we offer.

The White Paper "DTI—the Department for Enterprise" published in January announced changes in the structure of the Department designed to improve communications with business. Since then, the regional network has been strengthened and extended: 20 new satellite offices and three sub-offices have been opened and the number of staff employed in regional offices has been increased by about 20 per cent. The whole purpose of these changes is to make the Department more accessible to smaller firms and to develop closer communications with them.

In January, we also launched the enterprise initiative, the biggest and most comprehensive self-help package ever offered to British business. Much of the package is aimed specifically at small and medium size businesses. In particular, the consultancy initiatives are designed to encourage independent firms or groups with fewer than 500 employees to use consultancy services to improve their efficiency in key management areas—design, marketing, quality, manufacturing systems, business planning and financial and information systems.

There has been a very strong response to the enterprise initiative. Up to 1 July, we had received 96,472 inquiries for general information followed up by 60,233 inquiries about specific initiatives.

Inquiries about specific initiatives can be broken down as follows:

	Number
Consultancy	17,329
Exports	11,220
Regional Selective Assistance	9,668
Regional Enterprise Grant	5,113
Research and Technology	6,072
Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology	2,956
Business and Education	7,245

Rapid progress is being made in handling applications for the consultancy initiatives. A total of 7,993 applications have been received and 6,148 business reviews completed. A total of 4,815 have been referred to scheme contractors for consultancy to proceed and 158 projects have been completed. Over 80 per cent. of the applications approved for consultancy are from firms with fewer than 100 employees and about one third of the total have been from firms employing fewer than 10.

A range of financial support continues to be available to firms which meet the criteria for regional selective assistance (RSA). Over 20 per cent. by value of DTI offers of RSA in the last three years have been made to firms with fewer than 200 employees; this amounts to some £100 million in grant offered. Following the introduction in February 1987 of simplified arrangements for RSA offers of up to £25,000, grants of this size now account for nearly 10 per cent. of the value and 60 per cent. of the number of all new RSA offers, compared with 5 per cent. and 45 per cent. respectively before simplification.

A new scheme was introduced on 1 April 1988 in recognition of the particular problems that very small firms face in raising finance. The regional enterprise grant scheme provides fixed-rate grants to assist firms with fewer than 25 employees with investment and innovation projects in the development areas. The scheme has streamlined procedures and simple documentation to minimise the burden on small firms' managers.

The Department also provides a wide range of services to exporters through the medium of the British Overseas Trade Board. Although these services are not aimed exclusively at small businesses, they are designed with the needs of such firms very much in mind. Small firms account for over 70 per cent. of the board's contacts with industry.

We are currently looking to improve the overall quality of the services on offer so that they better reflect customers' needs. In particular, independent research commissioned by the Department has shown that there is a great deal of untapped export potential amongst small companies. Our aim is to encourage and help them to develop that potential.

The small firms merit award for research and technology. (SMART) competition was relaunched in the spring as a regional initiative. It now offers 100 awards worth up to £37,500 each, with 20 of these reserved for individuals and small firms working in urban programme areas. When the competition closed for entries on 30 June, over 900 applications had been received; at first sight, the overall standard seems very promising.

The enterprise and deregulation unit, which has been based in the DTI since July 1987, continues to co-ordinate and develop the Government's policy of reducing burdens on business both domestically and in the EC. The aim is to simplify those regulations which are necessary and get rid of those which are not. That helps all firms but is particularly important for small businesses which lack both resources and expertise in handling bureaucracy; requirements which impose negligible costs on large firms can be a real burden on smaller firms. A White Paper later this year will report on the further progress of the deregulation initiative both within DTI and across Whitehall.

LHW Futures and DPR Futures

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many complaints he has received about (a) LHW Futures and (b) DPR Futures in 1986, 1987 and 1988 to date.

Mr. Maude: During the years 1986, 1987 and 1988, to date, the Department of Trade and Industry received the following number of complaints concerning these companies:

	1986	1987	[1]1988
LWH Futures	1	5	9
DPR Futures	1	11	27

[1] To date.

DPR Futures

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of his inquiry into the affairs of DPR Futures.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Financial Services Act (Authorisations)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the applications of (a) Harvard Securities plc and (b) LHW Futures Ltd., for authorisation under the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Maude: I understand that Harvard Securities plc has applied for membership of The Securities Association and for authorisation under section 25 of the Financial Services Act from the Securities and Investments Board. Both applications are currently being considered and meanwhile the company holds interim authorisation by virtue of paragraph 1(1) of schedule 15 to the Act.

LHW Futures Ltd. has applied for membership of the Association of Futures Brokers and Dealers. That application is currently being considered and the company therefore also holds interim authorisation.

Applications for membership of a self-regulating organisation recognised under the Act or for authorisation under section 25 are matters for the organisation concerned and the SIB respectively.

Lonrho

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many unsolicited communications of a circular nature he has received from Lonrho plc in 1986, 1987 and 1988 to date; whether he has received any representations from hon. Members or others about these circulars; and if he will introduce regulations to prohibit expenditure on such circulars unless specifically provided for in the articles of association of any plc.

Mr. Maude: Records are not maintained which would enable identification of the numbers of such unsolicited communications. However, I have received representations both from hon. Members and from others about certain circular communications issued by Lonrho and relating to House of Fraser. I have no plans to introduce regulations relating to expenditure on such documents.

Research and Development

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish the amount of private sector non-defence research and development divided into terms of the major categories of energy, agriculture, physical sciences, social sciences, medicine, and so on.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that the information is not available.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will estimate the amount of research and development funding allocated over the last four years to international research and development projects and organisations; whether he will list what projects and organisations received these funds; and what proportion of these funds is allocated to defence projects.

Mr. Butcher: The only available information relates to budgeted estimates of Government expenditure on research and development (R and D) for international projects where there is a formal agreement between Governments on joint financing. The information is published annually in the section on "The International context for R and D in the United Kingdom" in "The Annual Review of Government Funded R and D," a copy of which is in the Library. It is given in the table.

Budgeted estimates of United Kingdom Government contribution to international projects

£ million

	Total	Defence projects	As a percentage of total
1986	281·1	20·6	7
1985	408·4	175·3	43
1984	367·4	156·7	43
1983	320·6	184·5	58

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list what research and development co-operation is known by Her Majesty's Government to take place between the United Kingdom and (a) Greece, (b) Portugal, (c) Spain and (d) Turkey.

Mr. Butcher: The Government encourage United Kingdom industry and other organisations to collaborate where appropriate in research and development with their counterparts in Greece, Portugal, Spain and Turkey. Because such collaboration ranges from participation in, for example, the NATO science programme and EUREKA and EC R and D projects to informal contacts, the information required to compile a complete list is not readily available and could only be assembled at disproportionate time and cost.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what Government programmes are specifically intended to stimulate co-operation in research and development internationally and with respect to other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation nations; and whether he will list the nations concerned.

Mr. Butcher: Government programmes in research and development are intended to achieve scientific and technological objectives and co-operation with partner nations often provides an effective means to achieve those objectives. A very large number of Government research programmes include elements of international co-operation, ranging from formal agreements to ad hoc arrangements between scientific groups. Any listing would be very extensive but, even so, probably incomplete.

The United Kingdom is a member of the following major international organisations which undertake collaborative research and development programmes:

	Membership
European Community (EC)	France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Denmark, Ireland, Greece, Spain, Portugal, United Kingdom
North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO)	As EC except Ireland; plus United States of America, Canada, Iceland, Norway, Turkey
United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (UN-ECE)	Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany (Federal Republic of), Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, USSR, United Kingdom, United States of America, Yugoslavia
European Science Foundation (ESF)	As EC except Luxembourg; plus Austria, Finland, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Yugoslavia
Council of Europe	As EC plus Austria, Cyprus, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Malta, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will estimate what proportion of non-defence research and development is spent on (a) pure research and (b) applied research.

Mr. Butcher The available information relates to Government funded research and development (R and D) for civil purposes. It is published in the section on "Government funded R and D expenditure" in the "Annual Review of Government funded R and D", a copy of which is in the Library. For 1986-87 basic research was 36 per cent. and applied research was 53 per cent. of total Government funded civil R and D.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish the amount of Government funded non-defence research and development divided into amounts allocated to the following major sectors of the community: energy, agriculture, physical sciences, social sciences, medicine, and any other categories.

Mr. Butcher: The available information relates to Government funded research and development by socio-economic objectives. It is published annually in the section on "The international content for R and D in the United Kingdom" in "The Annual Review of Government Funded R and D", a copy of which is in the Library. It is given in the table below:

Government funding of R and D in 1986 by socio economic objective

	£ million
Agriculture, forestry and fishing	198
Industrial development	444
Energy	188
Transport and Communications	16
Urban and rural planning	50
Environmental planning	49
Health	190
Social development and services	62
Earth and atmosphere	80
Advancement of knowledge	917
Civil space	124

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total spent on research and development, for the last four years; and what proportion this was of the gross national product.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the following table. Data are not available for 1982 and 1984 as there were no surveys of industrial research and development for those years.

	Total expenditure on R and D £ billion	Total as a percentage of gross domestic product
1981	6·1	2·4

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, of the total of research and development funding estimated to be spent over the last four years, what proportion is provided by Her Majesty's Government, what proportion by industry, what proportion by educational establishments, and what proportion by charities.

Mr. Butcher: Over the latest years 1981, 1983, 1985 and 1986 for which the information is available the Government funded 44·9 per cent. of total expenditure on research and development performed in the United Kingdom, industry 45·0 per cent., higher education 0·7 per cent. and non-profit making bodies 1·9 per cent. The balance of 7·5 per cent. was funded from overseas.

Signposters

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many bids have been received for signposters under the Department's enterprise initiative in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the north-west and (c) Bolton; and how many have been successful in each area.

Mr. Butcher: Around 140 bodies bid to become hosts for signposters under the business and education initiative, some bidding to provide a service in more than one LEA area. Of these, 30 were received from bodies intending to operate in the north-west and two applications related to the Bolton local education authority area. It is not possible to say how many bids will be successful as discussions with applicants are not yet complete but it is expected that there will be a host body operating in signposter services in nearly every LEA in the United Kingdom.

Airbuses

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent discussions he has had with British Aerospace plc about the extent of the losses made over the production of Airbuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have discussed on several occasions with the chairman and chief executive of British Aerospace the difficulties faced by the company in connection with their participation in the Airbus project. The details of our discussions must remain commercially confidential.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement showing the various amounts of grants, loans and other financial aids offered to British Aerospace plc in connection with the production of Airbuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No funding has been made available for Airbus production work. Launch aid funds development and design work only.

Film Industry

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many full-length feature films were made in the United Kingdom in (a) 1986-87 and (b) 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 14 July 1988]: There is no requirement for films made in the United Kingdom to be registered. This information is therefore not available.

Pit Bull Terriers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to acquaint the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals or such other bona fide animal welfare organisations which maintain an investigative role with relevant information in regard to the import or export of pit bull terriers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply.

Information required by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under the Animal Health Act 1981 for the purposes of licensing the importation of animals or providing export certification is a matter of confidence between the Ministry and the importer or exporter. It would therefore not be proper to disclose such information to a third party such as the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals without the consent of the importer or the exporter.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Meals

1. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of children taking school meals in each education authority for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: Statistics on the take-up of school meals in each of the local education authorities in England since 1979 are available in the annual school meals census, copies of which are available in the Library. Information was not collected in 1985 because of teachers' industrial action.

GCSE

16. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is in a position to assess the success of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is too early to make a final assessment. The interim report from Her Majesty's inspectorate published in March was encouraging. It showed that GCSE was already leading to improvements in teaching and learning. A full report will be published later in the year.

Teacher Shortages

17. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the areas of current teacher shortages by subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is no straightforward measure of teacher shortages. The number of unfilled posts as a percentage of the total number by posts by subject is one measure. Figures for January 1988 suggests shortages by this measure in the following main subjects: business studies 2 per cent.; P.E. 0·9 per cent.; mathematics 0·8 per cent.; craft design and technology 0·8 per cent.; modern languages 0·8 per cent.; physics 0·7 per cent. A secondary staffing survey conducted in March of this year is expected to confirm that a significant amount of teaching in maths, physics and CDT is done by teachers whose main qualifications are not in these subjects.

Kingman Report

18. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received on the Kingman report in relation to the teaching of English.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date, my right hon. Friend has received a total of around 70 written representations on the teaching of English, following the publication of the Kingman report.

ILEA (Payments)

19. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he arrives at the charges for one Inner London education authority borough paying another borough to educate children, because of the lack of educational establishments.

Mr. Dunn: Pupils in London and elsewhere cross local authority boundaries to attend school and there are established procedures for recouping costs. Under existing legislation it is for authorities themselves to agree on rates of recoupment. If they fail to agree they may seek a direction from the Secretary of State. In practice, authorities have collectively agreed rates through the inter authority payments committee. The inner London councils will be able to participate in these arrangements when they become education authorities.

City Technology Colleges

20. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the proposed curriculum to be followed by city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education Reform Bill provides that a CTC should have a broad curriculum with an emphasis on science and technology. It is intended that all the core and foundation subjects of the national curriculum shall be taught to all pupils in years 1 to 5, and that the pupils' progress should be measured against the proposed national attainment targets using national arrangements assessment. All pupils will be prepared for GCSE qualifications and for other recognised examinations. In addition CTCs will comply with general statutory requirements for the teaching of religious education. A curriculum framework document for CTCs has been drafted, and will be published when it is finalised.

31. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement about the financing of the city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier this afternoon to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks).

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement about progress with regard to the city technology colleges.

39. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on progress towards the setting up of city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) on 20 June at column 389. Since that date the CTC Trust has announced that Mr. Geoffrey Leigh, chairman of Allied London Properties, has made a personal donation towards the establishment of a CTC in Dartford.

ESCATA Video Material

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from education authorities on their use of ESCATA video material.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations.

Speech Therapy

22. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to discuss the provision of speech therapy for children with special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 21 June at column 523.

32. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much he estimates the need for speech therapy was increased by the Education Act 1981; what representations he has received which suggest that existing provision is failing to meet the increased need; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I do not consider the need for speech therapy was increased by the Education Act 1981: but the representations I have received indicate that the procedures introduced by the Act have, in some areas, led to a more realistic assessment of the incidence of that need among schoolchildren. The provision of speech therapy is the responsibility of the district health authorities, and a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Services.

National Confederation of Parent-Teacher Associations

23. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the national parent-teachers association; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend last met the National Confederation of Parent-Teacher Associations on 2 March 1987 to discuss schoolteachers' pay and conditions of employment.

National Curriculum

24. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to publish figures of the number and type of teachers required to deliver the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Members for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) and for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) on 21 June at column 523.

35. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the progress of the working parties established in relation to the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received the final reports of the national curriculum science and mathematics working groups. He is considering them and will be letting the National Curriculum Council have his comments, along with the reports, as a basis for consultations. My right hon. Friend appointed working groups for English and for design and technology in April this year. The English working group has been asked to submit advice on attainment targets and programmes of study for the primary phase by 30 September 1988; and a final report covering all stages to age 16 by 30 April 1989. The design and technology group has been asked to submit interim advice by 31 October 1988 and a final report by April 30 1989. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has appointed a national curriculum Welsh working group which has been asked to submit interim advice by 30 September 1988 and a final report by 30 April 1989.

37. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received on the content of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) on 21 June at column 524.

My right hon. Friend has recently received the reports of the maths and science working groups. He will shortly make proposals concerning attainment targets and programmes of study to the National Curriculum Council, which will consult widely before offering its advice.

Multi-racial Education

25. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to review the way in which multi-racial education is being promoted in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 21 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) at column 528.

Teachers (External Work)

26. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to formalise the current informal arrangements under which some teachers in scarcity subjects are able to refresh their knowledge by working with local firms.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is keen to encourage all teachers to gain up-to-date knowledge and experience of the world of business and industry. He commends those who have already done so, and those in business and education who are working to make this possible. He has no plans to prescribe formal arrangements. This objective can best be achieved through the development of contacts and arrangements between schools, business and industry at local level.

Primary School Teachers

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the expected number of vacancies for teachers in primary schools for September.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department does not collect projections of vacancies from local education authorities and schools who are themselves responsible for decisions on staffing levels. The education service in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Careers Teaching

28. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to raise the profile of careers teaching.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government attach high importance to good quality careers education and guidance. Under the joint DES—Department of Employment—Welsh Office initiative launched in April 1987, local education authorities are reviewing their policies and practice against the picture of desirable practice set out in the initiative booklet "Working Together for a Better Future". In parallel to this exercise, the Government are providing support to the in-service training of careers teachers as a national priority area under the local education authority training grants scheme.

Religious Education

29. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further plans he has or is considering for the maintenance of religious education in the primary and secondary sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education Reform Bill contains a range of provisions relating to religious education in maintained schools. The Department will in due couse be issuing a circular about the implications of these provisions.

Teachers (Negotiating Rights)

30. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has recently discussed with the teachers' unions the restoration of teachers' negotiating rights.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend held brief discussions with the teacher unions this year about new machinery for the determination of teachers' pay and conditions, during consultation with them on the recommendations of the interim advisory committee. Further meetings are due to be held in the autumn.

School Closures

33. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is planning any alterations to the present procedures which must be followed before he exercises his powers to close a local authority maintained school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

School Governors

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if Her Majesty's Government will make money available to assist the training of school governors.

34. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the initiatives being taken to train new parent governors in schools.

36. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the availability of qualified school governors needed under the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend recently announced that he proposed to follow up the pilot project funded through education support grants (ESGs) in 10 local education authorities with support for nearly £5 million of expenditure on school governor training through the ESG mechanism in 1989-90; the intention is that all local education authorities should be able to seek support in carrying out this task. The Department is giving a grant to the National Association of Governors and Managers; it is supporting initiatives to provide information and new training materials relating to school management generally and to our proposals for financial delegation; and it is publicising the enhanced role which school governing bodies will have.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on his proposals to allow opting out for schools.

38. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received relating to the establishment of grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about opting-out proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has now received well over 1,000 letters about his proposals for grant-maintained schools.

ILEA (Further Education)

40. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the maintenance of standards of further education in the area currently served by the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has received a number of representations expressing general concerns about the provision of further education in the area currently served by the Inner London educational authority. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he will expect the inner London councils to address this issue as part of their development plans for the provision of an education service in their areas from 1 April 1990.

Nursery Education

41. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action his Department intends to take to ensure that current levels of provision for educational services for children under five years are maintained and improved.

47. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to improve the availability and quality of nursery education.

Mr. Dunn: Provision of under-fives' education is at the discretion of LEAs and there are no plans to alter this. The Government have kept generously to their 1985 undertaking to maintain the level of resources in this area, actual expenditure having risen by over 10 per cent. in real terms since then. Current expenditure plans provide for participation rates for three and four-year-olds to remain constant up to 1992, despite the increase in age cohorts over that period.

School Violence

42. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities concerning violence in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: No representations have been received from local education authorities concerning violence in schools during the last 12 months.

Medical Research

43. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next plans to meet the secretary of the Medical Research Council to discuss priorities for medical research.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I met the chairman and secretary of the Medical Research Council on 4 July to discuss the council's research programme. He hopes to meet the secretary of the council again in the near future.

Surplus Land

44. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the amount of surplus land held by local education authorities; and what proposals he has for the sale of such surpluses.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not hold information on surplus land held by local education authorities. Registers containing details of unused and underused land owned by public bodies are compiled and maintained by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. It is the Government's policy to bring as much unused and underused publicly owned land as possible back into use.

18-Plus Examinations

45. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals there are to develop examinations at 18-plus, in the light of the changes in examinations at 16-plus.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCE examination boards have made the adjustments which they consider necessary to GCE advanced-level syllabuses to enable pupils to proceed to A-levels from GCSE without difficulty.

The Government have broadly welcomed the principles for A-level syllabuses and their assessment set out in chapter 2 of the report of the committee on A-levels, and look to the Secondary Examinations Council, and its proposed successor body, the School Examinations and Assessment Council, to reflect these principles in their day-to-day work of approving and scrutinising A-level syllabuses.

Under-Fives (Fees)

46. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek to amend section 61 of the Education Act 1944 so as to permit local education authorities to charge fees for the provision of education for children under the age of five years.

Mr. Dunn: No. The Government are firmly committed to preserving free admission and education during school hours at all maintained schools. Those provisions in the Education Reform Bill, currently before Parliament, which will repeal section 61 of the 1944 Act are intended to safeguard these fundamental features of our school system.

Education Reform Bill

48. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on his discussions with university vice-chancellors regarding the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Jackson: We have had useful discussions with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, as a result of which several constructive improvements have been proposed and made to the provisions in the Education Reform Bill.

Rural Primary Schools

49. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received regarding primary schools in rural areas.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 21 June at column 522.

University Grants Committee

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next hopes to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee to discuss the future of the funding of university education.

50. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the chairman of the University Grants Committee; and if he will list the subjects they discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee frequently in the course of normal business to discuss a wide range of matters relating to university funding and subject provision.

Haberdashers' Aske's Schools

51. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of the governors of Haberdashers' Aske's schools in Deptford about his proposal to convert them to a city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: No, but my officials have written to him recently on technical matters relating to the provision of section 14 of the Education Act 1944.

Business Sponsorship

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied to date with the amount of corporate and business sponsorship of educational projects in primary and secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Several major companies are very active in this field, but there is always scope for further development. The Government are keen that more small and medium-sized firms should become involved and that links with primary schools, in particular, should be strengthened. We have today published a booklet—"Education and Industry: Partners for the Future"—which illustrates the variety of good practice in school-industry links. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Education Reform

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the arrangements for selecting potential members and chairmen to be offered appointment by him to bodies named in the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley).

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the achievement of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mrs. Rumbold: During 1987-88 the Department purchased goods to the value of £3·8 million, of which some £1·3 million was spent with small firms. In the service area (minor works, cleaning, transportation, and so on) we estimate that 40 per cent. of our expenditure is with small firms. The Department has established a purchasing unit whose remit is to obtain value for money. The unit is aware of the importance attached by Government to helping small businesses and includes them in inquiries wherever appropriate.

Wave Research

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future role of the Institute of Oceanographic Sciences and other institutes controlled by the Natural Environment Research Council involved in wave research.

Mr. Jackson: The two Natural Environment Research Council institutes involved in wave research are the Institute of Oceanographic Sciences Deacon laboratory and the Proudman oceanographic laboratory. Both will continue to play a strategic role in maintaining Britain's place among world leaders in marine science. Science budget funded wave research at these laboratories will form part of the core research projects listed in the NERC strategy for marine sciences published last December. In addition they will continue wave research commissioned by Government Departments and other customers.

ENERGY

Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department currently has approximately 300 work stations, giving a ratio of 1 to 3·3 civil servants. I expect the number of work stations to continue to increase over the next five years, but much will depend on how my Department's business develops.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department's information technology (IT) steering committee consists of representatives of its central IT group (CITG), the main computer using divisions, the establishment and finance division including the internal audit branch, and a representative of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. The chairman is the grade 5 officer with responsibility for the Department's administrative expenditure and the CITG. The committee reports to the Department's management board comprising the permanent under- secretary, the two deputy secretaries and the principal establishment and finance officer. Ministers do not attend meetings of the committee.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many of the staff in his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Parkinson: Thirty-three per cent. (five officers).

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy is he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Parkinson: The extent to which my Department's activities affect small businesses remains largely as stated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 14 July 1987 at columns 414-15. My Department continues to take full account of small business needs in developing and implementing its policies. Particular developments have taken place in the following areas over the last year:

—British Coal Enterprise Ltd. has continued to help create jobs in coalfield areas, many of which are in small businesses. Funding available from the Government has risen to £45 million, and the company has attracted additional finance from other sources of over £228 million. New job opportunities created now total 30,275 in 2,138 individual projects.

—The Government are looking at ways to liberalise the restrictions applying to existing small, private, licensed mining operations.

—the Energy Efficiency Office has been involved in a number of new initiatives targeted specifically on small businesses. It has distributed a booklet, "Advice for Small Firms", through the Department of Employment's small firms advisory service (SFAS) and has helped to train SFAS counsellors to be aware of the advantages to small businesses in improving energy efficiency. It has also assisted in the launch of 13 energy action cities campaigns to raise the profile of energy efficiency in the local community, including small businesses; and run energy clinics in some regions at which small businesses are advised how best to solve their energy problems.

Electricity (Privatisation)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy that those consumers paying electricity charges be offered, in a paper sent to them together with their accounts, a priority opportunity to buy shares in their local electricity board on privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our aim will be to enable consumers to obtain shares in their local boards, but no decisions have been taken on priority applications.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Leonid Lubman

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has raised with the Soviet Foreign Minister the imprisonment since 1978 of Leonid Lubman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly make representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of prisoners of conscience such as Leonid Lubman. We raised his case at the official bilateral talks on human rights in Moscow on 23 June.

Exclusive Economic Zones

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his intentions with respect to the declaration of an exclusive economic zone around each of the dependent territories of (a) the Pitcairn Islands, (b) the British Indian Ocean Territories, (c) South Shetland, (d) South Sandwich, (e) South Orkney, (f) Bermuda, (g) Gibraltar, (h) Anguilla, (i) the British Virgin Islands, (j) the Cayman Islands, (k) Montserrat, (l) the Turks and Caicos Islands, (m) Ascension Islands, (n) St. Helena, (o) Tristan da Cunha, (p) the Falkland Islands and (q) South Georgia.

Mr. Mellor: Maritime zones are declared on a case-by case basis, taking into account all factors relevant to each case. We do not believe that there would be practical advantage in declaring EEZs around dependent territories, nor for that matter the United Kingdom, at present. Exclusive fisheries zones have already been declared around most territories listed while, in accordance with international law, exclusive rights over the continental shelf are inherent.

I am writing to the hon. Member giving details of the present position in regard to the different territories.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Mellor: Orders are placed with small businesses which are able to satisfy the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's value for money requirements. The value of such procurement in the last two years was:

	£ million
1986-87	6·695

One third of Foreign and Commonwealth procurement is from the central agencies. No data are available on how much of this business is with small firms.

In the financial year 1987-88 diplomatic service posts assisted an estimated 75,300 British business visitors and handled over 65,000 market information inquiries—final figures are expected to be available shortly—compared with 76,942 and 65,473 respectively in 1986. Separate figures for assistance given to small businesses are not recorded but such help represents a significant proportion of the assistance given.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there are any housing standards in the Falkland Islands for migrant workers with regard to the quality of lighting and the amount of external noise at the accommodation provided.

Mr. Mellor: In 1986 the Executive Council of the Falklands Islands agreed that the United Kingdom building regulations should be adopted as guidelines for housing standards by the colony's building committee. These cover external noise. The public works department uses British standards for lighting. No separate housing standards on the Falkland Islands apply specifically to migrant workers.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people are entitled to vote in St. Helena; and how many at present have registered to be able to do so.

Mr. Mellor: Of the 3,508 people entitled to vote in St. Helena, 1,712 have so far registered to do so.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he can make of the shortfall in the number of homes in St. Helena; and what plans there are for future house building.

Mr. Mellor: So far as we are aware there is no general homelessness in St. Helena. However, a housing policy for the island is being drafted in consultation with the St. Helena Government in order to identify the medium and longer term housing needs of St. Helena. An interim programme of housing assistance totalling £250,000 for this year is now being prepared under our aid programme and will be announced shortly.

Hong Kong (Rhino Horn)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what techniques are available to the Hong Kong authorities to determine whether a medicine pill contains rhino horn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are not aware of any technique which be used to determine conclusively the presence of rhino horn in medical preparations.

Hong Kong (Endangered Species)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many seizures have been made by the Hong Kong authorities in the first six months of 1988 of illegally imported endangered species.

Mr. Mellor: The Hong Kong authorities made 143 seizures of illegally imported endangered species in the first six months of 1988.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many restaurant inspections have been carried out so far in 1988 by the Hong Kong authorities, to ensure that no rare and endangered species of animals and plants are offered for sale as food.

Mr. David Mellor: The Hong Kong authorities carried out 206 such inspections in the first six months of this year.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any seizures of rare and endangered species of animals and plants have been made in restaurants by the Hong Kong authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No seizures of rare and endangered species of animals and plants were made in the course of restaurant inspections in the first six months of this year.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the illegal trade in rare and endangered species in Hong Kong.

Mr. David Mellor: We have received about 2,500 letters from members of the public about this matter since January this year.

China (Endangered Species)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of China regarding the enforcement of laws on trade in endangered species; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Officials have made clear our concern, and that of Members of this House, on this subject to the Chinese embassy in London. We are assured that the Chinese Government share this concern.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Women's Refuges

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the number of places per 10,000 women at women's refuges in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: On the basis of information available it is estimated that the number of places currently available in Northern Ireland, for women and their children, at women's refuges is 2·9 per 10,000 women aged 18 years and over in the population.

Health Services

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about co-operation on health services with the Irish Republic.

Mr. Needham: There has been regular contact and exchange of information between Ministers and officials of the Department of Health and Social Security Services in Northern Ireland and the Department of Health in Dublin as well as regular co-operation between the two health services, for example in the treatment of patients.

The respective Health Ministers have found the exchange of information about the way similar health problems in north and south are handled, extremely valuable and are committed to continuing the process of developing further avenues of co-operation in health matters.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the figures published recently by the Government statistical service in the 1988 edition of "Regional Trends" on the growth of gross domestic product per capita in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: GDP for Northern Ireland is measured by estimating the value of the income generated by economic activity. Income from employment, which normally accounts for over 70 per cent. of GDP, is calculated from data made available by Inland Revenue and DHSS (Great Britain). It has been established that, due to an error in the computer program used to assemble and extract the date, an increasing proportion of earners in Northern Ireland in the period 1983-86 were treated as "Region unknown". This has resulted in a cumulative underestimation of wages and salaries, and hence of gross domestic product, in each of the years 1983 to 1986. Preliminary investigations suggest that the underestimate of GDP for 1986 is of the order of 10 per cent.—15 per cent. In consequence it now appears that, whilst per capita GDP remains well below that of any other region, per capita growth in Northern Ireland may have been very close to the United Kingdom average rather than slipping well behind as previous data indicated. Revised figures are being produced for publication as quickly as possible and will be placed in the Library.

Belfast (Disadvantaged Areas)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to address the problems in the most disadvantaged areas of Belfast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: Considerable progress has been made in tackling many of the social and economic problems in Belfast, particularly in improving housing conditions and reviving the city centre. However there remain a number of areas, involving both the Protestant and Catholic communities, which are characterised by very high levels of unemployment, low levels of skill, poor educational achievement and a depressing physical environment.

I intend now to enhance the programme of action for these areas. This will be aimed at stimulating greater economic activity, reinforcing local enterprise, improving the quality of the environment, and equipping the people of these areas to compete successfully for available employment. I have asked the Minister who is responsible for the environment in Northern Ireland, who has special responsibility for Belfast, to take this work forward in conjunction with public agencies, the private sector and the voluntary sector.

I shall be reviewing, in the context of the 1988 public expenditure survey, the overall level of resources which can be made available for this programme. I am already providing significant public investment, and I have allocated a further £10 million for expenditure on projects in the financial year ending 31 March 1989.

The success of this programme depends not only on the public sector or on public resources, but on the active co-operation of the private and voluntary sectors. Responsible local people and bodies can make a significant contribution, with the help of the public agencies, in improving social and economic conditions. Yet, however much all people of goodwill in the local communities, the churches, the public and voluntary bodies try to do to revive the areas of greatest deprivation, it is the blight of terrorism that undermines the spirit, destroys hope, drives out initiative, instils fear and turns away opportunities for investment. The Government can play their part supported by all those who wish to see better times for the people of Belfast but it is an end to terrorism that would do most to bring back confidence, jobs, self-esteem and opportunities.

I am today placing in the Library papers which provide further background to this initiative.

Education Reform

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about discussions with Church leaders based on the consultation document on the reform of education making special reference to the place of religious education in the proposed common curriculum.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, and I have met representatives of the four main Churches. Our discussions ranged across the proposals contained in the consultative document including the place of religious education in the curriculum. The Church representatives have been assured, as has the House, that no decisions have yet been taken on the way forward on any aspect of the education reform proposals, nor will they be until all representations have been fully considered.

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many contracts for sums in excess of £100,000 were let by the Housing Executive in the financial year 1982-83 for (a) erection of dwellings, and (b) other capital works; of these, how many in each category have not yet had a final certificate issued; and how many of such contracts in each category were referred to arbitration;

(2) how many contracts for sums in excess of £100,000 were let by the Housing Executive in the financial year 1981-82 for (a) erection of dwellings, and (b) other capital works; of these, how many in each category have not yet had a final certificate issued; and how many of such contracts in each category were referred to arbitration.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 June 1988]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has informed me that information was not recorded in the form requested until 1986-87 and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by office for each complete month since the introduction of the social fund the numbers of people who have formally received money advice under the social fund.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 11 July 1988]: Up to 31 May 1988, the latest date for which information is available, no applicant to the social fund has received formal money advice although the opportunity to receive such advice has been given in those cases where it was considered appropriate.

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest evidence he has as to medical and public opinion in Northern Ireland on the legalisation of abortion.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 July 1988]: The policy of the British Medical Association which represents a large proportion of doctors in the Province is to support the extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland. However reports in the professional journals indicate that proposals for such an extension would not command the support of a significant number of Northern Ireland doctors. Public opinion as reflected by the views of the main political parties and Churches has consistently been opposed to the extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

WALES

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Torfaen, of 5 July, Official Report, column 520-1, what proportions these proposals represent of the White Paper's total housing expenditure over the planning period to 1991; and whether the figure for new buildings in the answer contains any private sector funding.

Mr. Grist: The £457 million we expect to see spent on housing in the Valleys in the next three years represents total investment (both by the public and private sectors) and is not therefore directly comparable to the planning totals in the White Paper.

Football Supporters (Membership Cards)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his policy on membership cards for football supporters in Cardiff, Wrexham and Swansea; what consultations he has had with the Sports Council Wales and football clubs in Wales concerning membership cards for football supporters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I am gravely concerned at the problem of football hooliganism and I will continue to monitor carefully the situation in Wales.

The Government have announced their intention to bring forward proposals for legislation to give statutory backing to a national membership scheme for all clubs in the Football League, which include Cardiff, Wrexham and Swansea. A working party under the chairmanship of the Football Association, the Football League, the Government and the police is to be set up to look at the details.

I have also asked the Football Association for Wales for a report on the proposal which it outlined to me during a meeting with its president and secretary on 22 March 1988 for the introduction of a membership card system for all Welsh supporters. The Sports Council for Wales has not been specifically consulted, as this matter is primarily one for the football authorities, the Government and the police to address.

Imported Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a statutory code of practice on imported waste transit and disposal.

Mr. Grist: As indicated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 29 June, at columns 254-256, a code of practice will be produced to give guidance on the steps required to discharge the statutory duty of care which is to be imposed on both producers and holders of waste including importers and holders of imported waste.

Homelessness

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate, county by county, of the number of homeless people in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Actual figures for cases of statutory homelessness are supplied quarterly to the Department by all Welsh local authorities. Figures for 1987, county by county, are as follows:—

	Number of cases presented	Number of cases accepted
Clwyd	1,190	840
Dyfed	596	532
Gwent	1,952	1,114
Gwynedd	435	227
Mid Glamorgan	1,693	1,008
Powys	146	120
South Glamorgan	1,339	696
West Glamorgan	1,072	757
Wales	8,423	5,294

The number of cases accepted as homeless in Wales in 1987 represents an 11 per cent. decrease over 1986.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further measures he proposes to tackle homelessness.

Mr. Grist: As I told the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes), on 20 May at columns 608-609, we are concerned to increase the supply of rented accommodation for those in greatest housing need through the specific proposals in the Housing Bill.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Welsh water authority concerning the implications of foreign investment on the proposed privatisation measures; when he expects the Welsh water authority to be privatised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh water authority will be offered for sale to the public following enactment of the necessary legislation. The question of foreign investment in the water industry has been one of the issues covered in my discussions with the chairman of Welsh Water.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 13 July, which of the factors listed in his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 505, led to the exclusion of Bedwas and Machen from the area defined in the Valleys initiative.

Mr. Peter Walker: It was felt that, on balance, Bedwas and Machen did not exhibit the economic, environmental and other characteristics associated with Valleys communities in sufficient degree to warrant their inclusion within the Valleys programme area.

Cardiff Bay (Barrage)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the nature of the representations he has received from the Commission of the European Community concerning the proposal to construct a barrage across Cardiff Bay; and what was his response to those representations.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is not the usual practice to disclose such representations or the responses.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that the proposal to construct a barrage at Cardiff Bay is subject to a comprehensive environmental assessment under the European Community's Directive 85/337/EEC; who he proposes to nominate as the competent authority; what the timetable will be to submit an assessment for consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The European Community's Directive 85/337/EEC does not apply to projects which are the subject of national legislation such as the Cardiff Bay barrage proposal, which is currently before Parliament in a Private Bill promoted by South Glamorgan county council. Nevertheless, the promoters have commissioned Liverpool university's environmental advisory unit to undertake an environmental impact assessment. That study is nearing completion and the report will be placed in the Library of the House when it becomes available.

Site Designations

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next intends to announce the designation of an area either as a Ramsar site under the Convention of Wetlands of International Importance or as a Special Protection Area under the European Community's directive on the conservation of wild birds, or both.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State for the Environment designates Ramsar sites and special protection areas in Wales in consultation with my right hon. Friend. I understand that a number of sites in Wales have been proposed and announcements will be made in due course.

Hospitals

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the number of general hospitals in each district health authority in Wales in April 1979, 1983, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 18 July 1988]: There is no agreed definition of a general hospital. The table shows the number of acute hospitals with 150 beds or more and the number of acute hospitals with less than 150 beds in each district health authority as at 31 March.

Health Authority	Number of acute hospitals with 150 beds or more				Number of acute hospitals with less than 150 beds

EMPLOYMENT

Training for Enterprise Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what numbers of trainees completed the training for enterprise programme in each standard region in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; how many of these trainees were employees of small firms; how many were in receipt of the enterprise allowance; and how many were on YTS, community programme and other Manpower Services Commission programmes.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of starts on the training for enterprise scheme.

Starts to the training for enterprise scheme

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
South East	1,669	7,189	9,918
London	1,105	7,432	12,988
South West	1,190	6,921	11,932
West Midlands	3,531	5,816	8,488
East Midlands	—	7,201	11,674
Yorkshire and Humberside	2,891	6,210	11,231
North West	5,019	12,263	16,350
Northern	1,890	3,173	7,636
Wales	848	3,851	6,816
Scotland	1,557	6,982	9,986
Great Britain Total	19,700	67,038	107,019

Notes:

(1) Training Commission regions have been used as figures are not recorded by standard region.

(2) Records of completions are not recorded: starts to the scheme have been given.

Information on how many trainees were employees of small firms, how many received the enterprise allowance, and how many trainees on YTS, community programme and other Training Commission programmes were involved in enterprise training, is not held.

Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Lee: There are 16,540 computer work stations in the employment department group; a ratio of one to every 3·5 civil servants. I would expect this ratio to improve over the next five years as the use of information technology throughout the group continues to expand.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Lee: The constituent parts of the employment department group with significant expenditure on information technology each have their own steering committee. The composition of each information technology committee is broadly similar being chaired at director, director general or chief executive level and comprising senior officials from information technology, financial resources, personnel and planning divisions. Major departmental users of computing and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency ae also represented. Ministers would not normally attend meetings of these committees and none has done so in the past year. However, where appropriate the findings of these committees are referred to Ministers.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the staff in his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: Fifteen staff in the Department of Employment group at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months. This amounts to almost half of all staff in those grades.

Training Programme (Disabled)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy that disabled people will be able to work part-time for the duration of their period in the Employment Training Programme.

Mr. Nicholls: There will be opportunities for part-time training on employment training for people whose disabilities restrict their ability to train full time.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the new employment training programme will (a) provide assistance to people who become disabled whilst in employment who may subsequently require retraining with their existing employer and (b) assist employers who wish to retain staff who become disabled.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training is designed to help longer-term unemployed people, including those with disabilities and is not open to those in employment. However, help continues to be available to employees, through the disablement advisory service and the Training Commission's employment rehabilitation service.

Disabled People's Employment Services

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultation is taking place with disability organisations concerning the review of disabled people's employment services announced on 18 March.

Mr. Lee: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Thursday 31 March, Official Report at column 430.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the exact criteria for the review of disabled people's employment services announced on 18 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The purpose of the review is to examine the full range of services supported by my Department and the Training Commission to help people with disabilities, taking account of information and advice already available, and in particular that offered by the national advisory council on employment of disabled people, and the conclusions in the Public Accounts Committee's Report on employment assistance to disabled adults published on 14 April 1988.

Accidents

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people died in accidents (a) at work in Wales and (b) on building sites in Wales in each of the years since 1979; how many health and safety inspectors were based in Wales to the latest date and in 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number of accidents at work and on building sites in Wales in 1979 and 1980 is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member with this information and place a copy of my letter in the Library. The remaining information is as follows:

1. Numbers of reported occupational injuries to employees and the self-employed in Wales resulting in death[1][2]

	Employees	Self-employed
1982	34	11

[1] The reporting period changed from a calendar to a financial year from 1 April 1986, under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences regulations.

[2] Injuries are reported to the relevant enforcing authority, either HSE or the local authority. For 1981-85, LA figures did not distinguish injuries to the self-employed, or to the public arising from work activity: these are included under "employees".

[3] Accidents reported to Mines and Quarries Inspectorate for the period 1 January 1985 to 31 March 1986 are all included under "1985".

[4] Period covered 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987.

Bulk Permits

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many bulk permits giving exemptions from the provisions of the Employment Act 1944, in respect of disabled people have been issued in each year since 1958.

Mr. Lee: The table gives the available information about the number of employers issued with bulk permits (some of whom may have received more than one permit) during the years shown.

Year	Number[1]
1979	21,789
1980	21,660
1981	20,841
1982	19,572
1983	18,102
1984	18,300
1985	18,486

[1] Employers who were below quota on 1 June but who had been granted bulk permits during the previous 12 months.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications for bulk permits giving exemptions from the provisions of the Employment Act 1944, in respect of disabled people have been refused in each year since 1958.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used to determine whether or not to grant a bulk permit giving exemption from the provisions of the Employment Act 1944, as they affect disabled people.

Mr. Lee: The criteria which determine whether a permit —of any kind—should be granted are set out in section 11(1) of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944. These relate to the nature of the work in question and the extent to which suitable registered disabled people are available. Bulk permits may be issued if, in the opinion of the disablement resettlement officer, registered disabled people who are suitable for the work in question are unlikely to become available for submission to the vacancies during the period covered by the bulk permit.

DEFENCE

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Sainsbury: To assist in obtaining better value for money, the Ministry of Defence has implemented a number of measures to broaden its competitive base. To encourage competition at both prime and sub-contract levels, opportunities for defence contracts have been advertised in the MOD Contracts Bulletin since 1986. To encourage small firms in particular to compete for our business in November 1986 my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement launched a small firms initiative.

In 1986-87, some 4,000 small firms secured direct defence business in excess of £1,000 million. In the same period some 500 small firms sought advice from the newly formed small firms advice division. During 1987-88, a further 1,500 small firms approached the division for guidance. The division conducted 40 seminars throughout the country, at which some 2,000 small firms were represented, to explain MOD's procurement policies and to encourage the firms to compete for our business. Many more firms made contact at the 25 business exhibitions in which the division participated.

The division is also responsible for producing the booklet "Selling to the MOD" which offers useful guidance on MOD's procurement policies and procedures and also provides a comprehensive network of contact points. The third edition of the booklet was published in 1987 and a fourth will be published later this year.

A separate strand of the initiative, the small firms research initiative, is aimed at enabling innovative small firms to obtain a greater share of Defence research funding. In 1987-88 funding of about £1 million was made available; a similar sum is being made available for the current financial year.

The initiative is designed to produce long-term benefits, but the early results are already very encouraging. A recent survey of 850 small firms which had approached the small firms advice division indicated a high level of customer satisfaction. Moreover, some 10 per cent. of firms responding to the survey actually secured defence business. There has also been a 45 per cent. increase in the number of firms added to the defence contractors list, MOD's register of potential suppliers. Of over 700 new additions during 1987, over 300 were small firms. We shall continue to monitor the response of small firms to the initiative and the contribution towards better value for money.

Research and Development

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of money spent for research and development for defence projects over the last four years; what proportion of each amount is assigned to research; and what to development.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence's expenditure on research and development is laid out in detail in table 3.3 of V2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm 344-II). In the last four years the net outturn and the proportion of the total classified as research have been:

1984-85	2,106	19
1985-86	2,266	18
1986-87	2,186	19

HOME DEPARTMENT

British Commonwealth Citizens

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards helping citizens of the British Commonwealth who have lived in the United Kingdom for a number of years but who, due to age or illness wish to return to their homeland, with the cost of their return.

Mr. Renton: Financial assistance from public funds for people who wish to return permanently overseas is available in certain circumstances under a scheme operated under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971. The scheme, which is not confined to citizens of the Commonwealth, is administered on behalf of the Government by the International Social Service of Great Britain. Applications for assistance are considered only where the following conditions are satisfied:

—the applicant is not a British citizen;
—the applicant has been accepted for settlement in this country but now wishes to leave permanently;
—the applicant is of limited means and cannot finance his or her departure. In assessing a person's ability to pay their own fare, the first £3,000 of their realisable capital is disregarded.

In addition, section 29 requires that it must be in the interest of the people concerned to return overseas and that they wish to do so.

Assistance is limited to the payment of fares and incidental expenses incurred in leaving the United Kingdom, including the transport of a small amount of personal effects. Resettlement grants are not provided. Assistance towards the cost of travel for resettlement in Europe is also excluded from the scheme.

Police Checks (Employment)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, under the arrangements for police checks on those seeking work with substantial access to children, applicants will always be shown all information provided by the police which is different from that which they themselves have declared on their application form.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under paragraph 17 of the Home Office circular (86) 44 on the arrangements for the disclosure of police information about those seeking to work with children in various statutory bodies, all discrepancies between the information supplied by the police and that provided by the applicant must be discussed with the applicant and the applicant is to have the opportunity to see the information provided by the police. Similar procedures apply with those seeking to work with children in independent schools and the National Health Service, and would apply in the proposed scheme for the voluntary sector.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any intention of seeking any further exemptions to the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act to enable police checks to be carried out on those seeking to work with vulnerable groups other than children.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans at present to seek further exemptions to the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act to enable police checks to be carried out on those seeking to work with vulnerable groups other than children.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether an individual who is denied employment on the basis of a police report, under the arrangements for police checks on those seeking work with substantial access to children, has any right of appeal.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for prospective employers to decide appeal procedures in such cases, since they decide whether to offer employment in the light of the information provided by the police under these arrangements.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made to ensure that information provided by the police to voluntary organisations, under the proposed arrangements for police checks on those applying to work with substantial access to children, is kept secure and confidential.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are seeking to set up a pilot scheme for the disclosure of police information to the voluntary sector about those seeking to work with children. Participating organisations will be required to make adequate arrangements to ensure the security and confidentiality of any information provided to them, and this aspect will be closely monitored by the project evaluation team.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what aspects of the proposed arrangements for conducting police checks on those seeking work with children in the voluntary sector, will be covered by the arrangements for monitoring the pilot scheme; and whether the confidentiality of the police information will be specifically monitored.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are discussing the detailed arrangements for a pilot scheme for the disclosure of police information, about those seeking to work with children, with the voluntary sector. The confidentiality of the information provided would be specifically monitored by the project evaluation team. Other aspects proposed for monitoring include:

— the scope of the arrangements
— the costs of the arrangements
— the time taken for processing applications
— how the arrangements could be extended to cover locally based voluntary organisations.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, under the existing arrangements for police checks on those seeking work with substantial access to children, local authorities are currently providing facilities to voluntary organisations in their area to obtain such checks on job applicants and volunteers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Local authorities are not entitled to seek the disclosure of police information about the staff or volunteers of voluntary organisations under these arrangements. Separate arrangements are being set up for voluntary organisations.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will place in the Library and send to the Data Protection Registrar any evidence placed before the committee reviewing the workings of the Data Protection Act;

(2) when the committee reviewing the workings of the Data Protection Act is due to report; which Departments are represented on the committee; and how the committee will collect evidence;

(3) whether he will invite a member of staff from the office of the Data Protection Registrar to join the committee reviewing the workings of the Data Protection Act;

(4) whether he will extend the remit of the committee reviewing the workings of the Data Protection Act to report on the implications for individual privacy that arise from (a) the exemption from the whol Act if personal data are used for national security purposes, (b) the lack of powers for the registrar in relation to any of the eight data protection principles if a disclosure is required by any enactment, (c) the exemption from the duty to obtain personal data fairly and lawfully if the data are required or obtained by any enactment and (d) the recent amendment to the Local Government Finance Bill which allows the Secretary of State for Social Services to break his duty of confidentiality.

Mr. Renton: The interdepartmental committee reviewing the implementation of the Data Protection Act is chaired by the Home Office and includes officials from the Department of Trade and Industry, and the Department of Employment. The Data Protection Registrar has been asked to act as consultant and adviser to the committee and will attend meetings as necessary. The evidence required by the committee, and the manner of its collection will be a matter for the committee, which is aware of the consultation exercise being undertaken by the Data Protection Registrar. The result of this exercise will be available to the committee. It is not intended that the evidence should be placed in the Library.

The committee is aware of the need to report to Ministers as soon as possible, but no target date has been set. The review committee will consider the implementation of all aspects of the Data Protection Act, within the remit of the terms of reference contained in my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 4 July, column 420.

Emergency Planning Officer (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what submission has been received for grant aid from the South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority in respect of the appointment of a brigade emergency planning staff officer in the South Yorkshire county fire service; and if he will list those fire brigades that have a brigade emergency planning staff officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No claim for grant aid has been received fromSouth Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority in respect of the appointment of a brigade emergency planning officer. Only three fire brigades in England and Wales have not yet made such an appointment—South Yorkshire FCDA, Derbyshire county council and South Glamorgan county council.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accesses there were to each index of the police national computer over the last year; whether he will include in these statistics an indication of the number of access requests that could search more than one index; and what is the predicted use of each index when the new police national computer is installed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The total number of accesses to each of the indices of the police national computer in the year to 30 June 1988 was as follows:

Index	Number of accesses
1. Stolen and Suspect Vehicles 2. Vehicle Owners	19,133,179
3. Chassis/Engine Numbers	508,442
4. Fingerprints	202,692
5. Fingerprints—Scene of Crime	14,693
6. Criminal Names	0
7. Wanted/Missing Persons	1,854,126
8. Disqualified Drivers	838,789
9. Convictions	537,300
10. Major Convictions	77,660
11. Crime Pattern Analysis	304,850
There have also been the following joint accesses:
To indices 6 and 9	1,271,769
To indices 6, 7 and 9	1,720,781
To indices 6, 7, 8 and 9	6,768,307
To indices 4, 6 and 9	536,444

The use of each index is not expected to change significantly as a result of the introduction of the replacement police national computer.

All accesses to the criminal names index are shown as joint accesses in the above table, as requests for criminal names information will in addition automatically generate information from the convictions application.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each category found in the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer over the last year; and whether he will include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each category in the index over the year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current number of cases and the maximum and minimum number of cases in the year to 30 June 1988 for each of the sub categories of the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer are as follows:

Sub Category	Numbers of cases on 30 June 1988	Maximum in last 12 months	Minimum in last 12 months
1. Lost or Stolen	378,745	378,745	358,603
2. Obtained by Deception	247	373	247
3. Found or apparently abandoned	25,325	29,351	25,325
4. Removed to police custody	16,225	18,460	15,198
5. Removed by police from one street to another	184	294	95
6. Suspected of being involved in a particular incident (e.g. crime)	1,094	1,483	1,094
7. Owned or used by police	3,608	5,371	3,528
8. Of interest to police (need not be crime related)	15,826	19,808	15,776
9. Seen or checked by police in noteworthy circumstances	7,339	8,796	7,338
10. Details not to be passed over open airwaves (e.g. vehicles used in observation duties)	5,286	5,286	4,669

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each category found in the wanted and missing person's index of the police national computer over the last year; and whether he will include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each category in the index over the year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current number of cases and the maximum and minimum number of cases in the year to 30 June 1988 for each of the sub categories of the wanted and missing persons index of the police national computer are as follows:

Sub category	Numbers of cases on 30 June 1988	Maximum in last 12 months	Minimum in last 12 months
1. Wanted	33,601	33,601	31,166

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each index of the police national computer over the last year; and whether he will include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each index.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current number of records and the maximum and minimum number of records in the year to 30 June 1988 for each substantive index of the police national computer are as follows:

Index	Numbers of records on 30 June 1988	Maximum in last 12 months	Minimum in last 12 months
1. Stolen and suspect vehicles	459,333	462,227	445,708
2. Vehicle owners	38,309,721	38,309,721	35,613,466
3. Chassis (engine numbers)	752,610	752,610	714,544
4. Fingerprints	3,870,485	3,870,485	3,757,955
5. Fingerprint scene of crime	7,297,687	7,297,687	6,955,054
6. Criminal names	5,286,429	5,286,429	5,168,573
7. Wanted/missing persons	106,687	106,687	100,137
8. Disqualified drivers	360,470	360,470	327,896

10. Major investigations	299,429	299,429	248,435
11. Crime pattern analysis	14,537	14,537	13,896

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accesses there were to each category of the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer over the last year; what has been the percentage growth in use of these categories over the year; and what is the predicted use of each category when the new police national computer is installed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Though the index of stolen and suspect vehicles comprises records of vehicles in various categories, the records are not kept in these separate categories but are indexed by vehicle registration number. It is not therefore possible to give the information in the form requested, but in all there were 19,133,179 accesses to the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer in the year to 30 June 1988, a decrease of 1 per cent. over the previous year. The use of the index is not expected to change significantly as a result of the introduction of the replacement police national computer.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accesses there were to each category of the wanted and missing person's index of the police national computer over the last year; what has been the percentage growth in use of these categories over the year; and what is the predicted use of each category when the new police national computer is installed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Though the wanted and missing persons index of the police national computer comprises records of persons in various categories, the records are not kept in these separate categories, but are indexed by names. It is not therefore possible to give the information in the form requested, but in all there were 10,343,214 accesses to the wanted and missing persons index of the police national computer in the year to 30 June 1988, a decrease of 11 per cent. over the previous year. The use of the index is not expected to change significantly as a result of the introduction of the replacement police national computer.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of accesses made to the police national computer by each constabulary over the last year; and whether he will give the proportion of access requests made to the vehicle indexes of the police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is collected on the basis of occasional monthly samples, and annual totals are not therefore available. The last sample was taken in February 1988. In that month, the number of transactions made to the police national computer by each constabulary, and the proportion of these transactions which were made to the vehicle indexes on the PNC were as follows:

Constabulary	[1]Number	[2]Proportion
Avon and Somerset	68,115	62·4

[2]Transactions made to vehicle indexes.

Cellular Vans

Mr. William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made in the introduction of cellular vans to transport remand prisoners to the courts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The prison service recently concluded an investment appraisal of the proposal to provide a number of cellular vehicles for HMP Brixton to use in transporting prisoners to court. The findings of the study and its financial implications are currently under consideration.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) personal and (b) project licences have been refused under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 since the Act came into force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not our practice to disclose such information.

Police Manpower

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the rate of natural wastage of police manpower in London in the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 1,513 officers left the force through natural wastage during the year ending 12 July. This number comprises:

449 ordinary retirements
224 medical retirements
24 deaths
233 transfers to other forces
583 resignations

I support the Commissioner's efforts to reduce premature wastage.

AIDS

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce AIDS testing of the prison population.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy on blood testing of prisoners for HIV antibody follows the Government's policy for the general community. Routine testing is not carried out and there are no plans to introduce it.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what precautions are being taken in prisons to safeguard prisoners from infection by the AIDS virus.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our preventive measures include systematic medical inquiry and examination at the reception stage, counselling of individual prisoners, precautionary regime restrictions at the discretion of the medical officer for prisoners identified as HIV antibody positive, and a strong emphasis on educational initiatives directed to all prisoners. A purpose-designed video film for prisoners is at an advanced stage of preparation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to make it a criminal offence to infect someone with the AIDS virus either knowingly or negligently.

Mr. John Patten: I refer refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 22 April, column 591-92.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce AIIDS testing on immigrants arriving to stay in Britain for more than 12 months on (a) a voluntary basis and (b) on a compulsory basis.

Mr. Renton: We have no such plans at present. The Government do not believe that such measures would have any significant effect in reducing the spread of AIDS in this country. Nevertheless, they are keeping the position under review.

Summer Time

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received on his consultation note "Summer Time" from individuals or organisations in (i) Doncaster, Central, (ii) Doncaster, North and (iii) Don Valley; and if he will accept representations received after 30 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no representations directly from these constituencies but they have been submitted to other Departments who have provided us with co-ordinated replies from bodies within their spheres of interest. Representations are still welcome.

Mentally Disturbed Persons

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to encourage the courts to use the existing provisions in the Mental Health Act 1983 to enable mentally disturbed persons to be taken into the health system rather than the penal system.

Mr. John Patten: "The Sentence of the Court", a handbook for the courts on the treatment of offenders, copies of which are in the Library, describes the courts' powers when dealing with mentally disordered offenders. We are considering whether further guidance to the courts, and other criminal justice services, would be helpful.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards obtaining a psychiatric profile of the prison population and to work up options for the development of arrangements for the care and management of mentally disturbed inmates, as recommended by the inter-departmental working group on mentally disturbed offenders.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Progress is as follows. On 31 October 1987 a contract was entered into with the institute of psychiatry, university of London, to produce over a three-year period a definitive statement of the dimensions of the problem of sentenced mentally disordered offenders in the prison system. The research team is on target with their schedule of visits to prison establishments.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has instructed the prison epartment to give mental disturbance equal recognition with other factors such as age, type of sentence, and security category in the routine allocation of persons given a custodial sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Behaviour and medical, including psychiatric, needs are given full weight along with the other factors mentioned in allocating sentenced prisoners to training establishments.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proportion of the inmates of Her Majesty's prisons on remand who are mentally disturbed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At 30 September 1987 it was 1·73 per cent. This is calculated on the basis of the remand population of 10,837 on that date, and returns from prison medical officers which showed that there were then 188 unsentenced inmates considered to be suffering from mental disorder of a type or degree such that they would be detainable under the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the improvements in the handling of cases of mentally disturbed prisoners by the prison department and the prison service, which were recommended in paragraph 2, sub-paragraphs (vi) to (xi) of the report of the interdepartmental working group on mentally disturbed offenders in the prison system in England and Wales, have now been implemented.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. Recommendations (vi) to (xi) refer to administrative procedures for the transfer of mentally disordered inmates to hospital. In sending copies of the report to all managing medical officers in prison service establishments the director of prison medical services drew attention to those in which they are able to make a contribution, particularly in the prompt initiation of transfer procedures when that course is clinically indicated. The Department is monitoring carefully its performance in handling transfer applications submitted by prison medical officers.

Psychiatric Treatment (Prisoners)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the psychiatric profile of the prison population which he proposes to obtain will show which prisoners had had psychiatric treatment as in-patients before they were sentenced.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. The extensive check list the research team are using covers the question of any psychiatric history with specific reference to whether this was as an in-patient.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months, and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office has maintained its deregulation initiative during 1987-88, some aspects of which are of particular importance to small businesses. The Licensing Act 1988 will enable some 100,000 pubs, clubs and bars to benefit from longer opening hours fom 11 am to 11 pm on weekdays. In addition pubs, bars and off-licences will be entitled to open for an extra hour on Sunday afternoons. The licensing system has been streamlined and legislative controls on vineyards have been lightened. I recently made regulations allowing bingo halls to open in the mornings.

Last year the Data Protection Registrar introduced a simplified registration form aimed at small business. It was drawn up after wide consultation with groups representing small businesses and, so far, over 14,000 applications have been made on it. On 4 July in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) I announced a review of the Data Protection Act which will include the registration requirements.

The Home Office, in partnership with other Government Departments, the private sector and local authorities, has helped to establish and fund a further enterprise agency in an inner city area with a high ethnic minority population in addition to the four similar agencies previously established. The performance of the first three agencies, which opened in 1986, continues to be independently evaluated, using performance indicators such as the number of businesses established and their survival rate. An interim report considered that there was ample demand for the agency's services and that, as far as could be judged at that stage, the agencies were fulfilling the expectations of their sponsors. A final report, which will provide more quantitative data, is due later this year.

The Home Office provides funding through section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for a number of local authority posts concerned with ethnic minority business development. There are presently about 80 such posts, of which 13 were approved in the year up to 30 June 1988. In addition, the Home Office continues to provide a grant for two business-development outreach workers from an existing enterprise agency. Routine monitoring arrangements cover all such posts.

In addition, my Department contributes indirectly on local small-business initiatives through its funding of the community projects foundation and of the local development agencies development fund. Projects that these groups support are often concerned with developing business skills in the community.

War Crimes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request his war crimes inquiry team, during its forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union, to seek any information regarding statements given by former SS General Wilhelm Mohnke during the period he was held captive in the Soviet Union following world war 2, about the allegations of war crimes made against him at that time.

Mr. John Patten: The inquiry is concerned with allegations against persons who are now British citizens or resident in the United Kingdom. The allegations involving Wilhelm Mohnke fall outside its terms of reference, and it would not therefore be appropriate for the inquiry team to raise the case during its visit to the Soviet Union.

Passports

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made towards improving the time taken to process passport applications at United Kingdom passport offices; what is the current processing time; what was the processing time in July 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Good progress is being made towards reducing the time taken to issue passports in response to non-urgent postal applications. The current processing times, compared with those for the corresponding week of 1987, are shown in the table below. Urgent applications are given priority wherever possible and are not normally subject to delay.

Passport Office	Average time taken between receipt of application and dispatch of passport (working days)
	17 July 1988	19 July 1987
London	24	60
Glasgow	11	50
Peterborough	29	24
Newport	20	52
Liverpool	12	37
Belfast[1]	3	3

[1] The Belfast Office is by far the smallest.

The special measures which I announced on 31 March in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) at column 679 have helped to improve performance during the present period of peak demand. These measures will remain in force and, in addition, blocks of postal applications are being transferred on a regular basis from the hardest pressed offices to those where processing times are shorter.

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made with computerisation of the United Kingdom passport offices and the introduction of a new form of British passport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: On 24 July 1984 at columns 219-20 my right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary, announced the Government's plans for computerisation of passport issuing and changes in the format of the British passport. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 11 February 1987 at columns 218-19 that these changes would take effect from this July.

The travelling public, including business travellers, will benefit substantially from these changes. As computerisation of passport offices progresses the issue of new passports will be much improved. As machine readable passports become more widely used throughout the world, this will become an advantage for holders of the new style British passports. Sharing a common format of passport with other European Countries will also help to simplify formalities at frontier controls throughout the European Community.

The passport office in Glasgow will be the first of the United Kingdom passport offices to be computerised. The equipment has been installed and the first of the new United Kingdom passports will be issued in mid-August after the system has been tested and staff have been trained in its use. Over a six month period starting this October, the computerised Glasgow office will take over the processing of postal applications currently handled by the London passport office. By the end of 1989, all six passport offices in the United Kingdom should be computerised and issuing United Kingdom passports in the new format.

The new passport has a machine-readable page designed to reduce delays at frontier controls. Passports which include the particulars of a wife or husband cannot be issued in machine-readable form and are being discontinued, although children can still be included. Accordingly, the redesigned and simplified passport application forms, which will replace existing stocks of forms at Post Offices throughout the United Kingdom at the end of this month, in preparation for the change to computerisation, will contain no provision for passports with the holder's spouse included. However, valid applications for these passports made on the old forms will be accepted for a short period after the new forms are introduced.

I have placed in the Library the latest pre-production samples of the new passport and of the similar form of passport that will be issued to those British nationals who do not have rights of free movement, employment and establishment within the European Community.

Lindholme Prison

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent disturbance at Her Majesty's prison, Lindholme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A disturbance took place at Her Majesty's prison, Lindholme on the night of 15 July. At approximately 11.20 pm prisoners smashed windows in C wing. Soon afterwards inmates in other wings joined in and groups of prisoners began roaming the prison causing damage and setting fire to buildings.

Staff were obliged to withdraw and contingency plans were activated and worked well. The police and fire services, off duty Lindholme staff, and support staff from other north region prisons attended the incident and the prison was brought under control by 3.30 am.

There was fire and smoke damage to a number of buildings including the living units and hospital. Fire had caused structural damage to a wall in the dining room complex. The extent of this is not yet known, but it is not thought to be in a dangerous condition and the building remains intact. The cost of repairs has been initially assessed as being in the region of £70,000. Work is already in hand to make good the damage.

No injuries to staff have been reported. One prisoner, who is thought to have been struck in the back by another prisoner was treated for minor injuries in an outside hospital and returned to the prison. Another is thought to have a fragment of glass in his right eye. Six prisoners escaped after breaking the security fence and two remain unlawfully at large. Forty-five prisoners were temporarily lodged in police custody and later taken to other prisons.

The prison was quickly returned to its normal routine. Normal visiting arrangements took place the next day. On the night of 17 July there were two further minor incidents in which clothing and blankets were set alight. The prison is now in a controlled and stable state with prisoners assisting to repair damage and cleaning up.

My right hon. Friend has instructed the deputy director general of the prison service, Mr. Gordon Lakes, CB, MC, to conduct an inquiry into the incident. The inquiry team began its work on 17 July. Mr. Lakes will inquire into the Lindholme disturbance taking into account his inquiry into the disturbance last month at Haverigg.

I visited Lindholme on the morning following the disturbance and spoke to staff and inmates. It was apparent to me that the trouble was caused by a small element and that most prisoners did not wish to be involved. I pay tribute to the prompt and efficient action taken by prison staff, the police and the fire services in dealing with this incident.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the procedure which the Forestry Commission will pursue in applying the European Community's environmental assessment directive to its own planting activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer The procedures to be adopted for new planting by the Forestry Commission will, in all important respects, be the the same as those laid down in the Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988 in respect of new planting by the private sector.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Donald Thompson The great majority of the farming and fishing enterprises with which my Department is concerned qualify as small businesses. Over the past 12 months my Department has continued to provide these enterprises with assistance in numerous ways; for example, through the many services of ADAS, through grants and subsidies, through trading, through our policies for conserving fish stocks and regulating fishing and through our support for a number of different bodies concerned with such matters as marketing and promotion.

In the past as well as in the previous 12 months policies have been constantly reviewed, adapted and developed to meet changing circumstances and needs. In addition, my Department seeks to make a positive contribution to the Government's deregulatory strategy aimed at encouraging enterprise and removing unnecessary regulatory burdens on businesses.

In addition, as part of this Ministry's purchasing strategy, we are developing improved and closer relationships with small suppliers in order to stimulate competitiveness and innovation. Detailed guidance notes have now been issued to all purchasing staff to assist in achieving this aim and monitoring systems have been introduced which indicate that a significant proportion of the Ministry's purchasing expenditure is now being channelled through small firms.

EC Food Supplies

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider extending the distribution of free European Economic Community food supplies to pensioners.

Mr. Gummer: European Community legislation requires that the food be distributed under this scheme only to the most deprived persons in the Community. We have been allocated £10·4 million for this purpose and applications from organisations exceeded the allocation by about three times. We expect our allocation to be fully used. The Government have decided that those on income support or family credit, together with people of no fixed abode or in welfare hostels, meet this criterion. Pensioners in any of these categories are, of course, eligible.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give (a) the terms of reference of the working party on bovine spongiform encephalopathy and (b) the names and occupations of the members of the working party.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The terms of reference of the working party are to advise on the implications of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) and matters relevant thereto. Sir Richard Southwood, Professor of Zoology at Oxford University, is chairing the working party.

The other members are Dr. W. B. Martin, ex-Director of the Animal Diseases Research Association, Moredun institute, Edinburgh, Professor M. A. Epstein, Nuffield department of clinical medicine, John Radcliffe hospital, university of Oxford, and Sir John Walton, President of the General Medical Council.

CAP (Discussion Paper)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take in the light of the discussion paper, "Reform of the Common Agricultural Policy: New Opportunities for Wildlife and the Environment", recently published by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 July 1988]: I welcome this discussion paper which is the latest in a series published by bodies interested in the welfare of the countryside. I am pleased to note that in the foreword to the paper the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds recognises the important role of farmers as custodians of the countryside and the problems they face. I shall be studying the proposals in the paper and look forward to seeing the policy statement on agriculture which the society intends to issue next year in the light of comments on its discussion paper.

SCOTLAND

Consultants

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the cost to his Department of employing management or computer consultants for each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Rifkind: The following information on spending on consultancy fees is readily available.

	[1]1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1986-87 £	1987-88 £
Management Consultants	47,512	491,864	569,038	198,338
Computer Consultants	124,487	83,493	238,365	386,438

[1] The 1984-85 figures relate only to contracts let during the last quarter of the year: comprehensive figures for the full year are not held centrally.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each management or computer consultancy contract extant in the Scottish Development Agency as at 1 January 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Rifkind: The following management and computer consultancy contracts were extant on 1 January 1987:

Firm and Subject of Assignment
	Assignment
Management Consultants
BP International Ltd.	Production of a Scottish Office Procurement Manual
Cooper and Lybrand Associates Ltd.	Study of investment function, Scottish Development Agency
Computer Consultants
Ashford Associates Ltd.	Document indexing and retrieval
PA Computer and Telecommunications	Technical advice on computerisation of criminal and offence records

Privatisation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report any bodies or organisations at present under his control and in the public sector which he is investigating with a view to privatisation.

Mr. Rifkind: The privatisation of the following bodies is in preparation:

South of Scotland Electricity Board
North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board
Scottish Transport Group

Acid Rain

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to introduce sulphur-scrubbing equipment in coal-fired power stations in Scotland, in order to alleviate the problem of acid rain.

Mr. Lang: Only about one third of electricity generated in Scotland is produced by coal-fired power stations. These stations already burn low sulphur coal and contribute only some 2 per cent. to United Kingdom emissions of sulphur dioxide. The deposition of acidity in Scotland is predominantly from sources outside Scotland. Accordingly, there are no plans at present to introduce sulphur-scrubbing equipment in any Scottish coal-fired power station.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what responsibility a privatised electricity industry in Scotland will have to alleviate the problems of acid rain by (a) the liming of land and (b) the introduction of sulphur-scrubbing equipment at coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Lang: The Government will ensure that the privatised electricity industry will carry out the work necessary to achieve reductions in the emission of pollutants from power stations required under air quality legislation. There are no proposals to introduce the liming of land in the United Kingdom.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will estimate the approximate expenditure per head for each of the local authority functions or responsibilities that is consistent with a standard level of service that arises from the average community charge to be paid by each community charge payer.

Mr. Lang: The calculation of the average community charge for any year will be a simple arithmetical exercise, and the resultant figure has no particular significance in relation to standards of service. The level of provision per head for each of the major local authority services in 1988-89 is as follows:

	Average (£) per head
Education	339·66
Social Work Services	76·67
Law, Order and Protective Services	86·38
Roads and Transport	61·77
Water, Sewerage and Environmental Services	48·04
Planning Services	6·01
Recreation	28·66
Miscellaneous	30·26
Central Administration	26·27

Notes.

1. Registrar General's estimates of population as at 30 June 1987 have been used.
2. In 1988-89 there is also a margin of £40 million (£7·82 per head) which has not been allocated to individual services.

Mr. Cohen To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will describe the performance criteria for each of the major local authority functions or responsibilities that allowed him to arrive at a standard level of service that arises from the average community charge to be paid by each community charge payer.

Mr. Lang: The calculation of the average community charge for any year will be a simple arithmetical exercise, and the resultant figure has no particular significance in relation to standards of service. I intend however to distribute revenue support grant in such a way as to equalise for differences in expenditure need so that if two councils with the same responsibilities both spend at assessed need, they will have the same community charge. The process of needs assessment is a complex one which is kept under continual review, in full consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if prisoners on remand who are subsequently convicted and who have their convictions backdated to the start of their period of remand, will have the full amount of the poll tax paid by them while on remand reimbursed by local authorities.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 July 1988]: Provisions inserted into the Loal Government finance Bill at Report Stage in the House of Lords will amend the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc (Scotland) Act 1987 to provide that remand prisoners, as well as convicted prisoners, will be exempt from liability to pay the personal community charge.

Schools (Overcrowding)

Mr. Galbraith To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has had concerning overcrowding in schools due to placement requests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since the beginning of this year I have received six representations concerning overcrowding in schools due to placement requests.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider giving additional powers to parents within a catchment area to refuse placement requests which lead to overcrowding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The power to deal with placing requests resides with education authorities. I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to his further question on this subject.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to prevent overcrowding in schools due to placement requests for pupils outside the schools' catchment area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The law provides that a placing request may be refused if granting it would be seriously detrimental to the educational well-being of the pupils in the school concerned.

Schools (Strathkelvin and Bearsden)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of placement requests for each school in Strathkelvin and Bearsden.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy to provide resources to cover any shortfall revealed in the allocation so far made for the cost of the nurses' pay award; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much he has allocated to each health board to fund the nurses' recent award in cash terms and as a percentage increase of the nursing salary budget;

(3) on what basis he has allocated money to each health board to fund the nurses' pay award.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The allocations totalling £83·4 million made to health boards are expected to meet fully the cost of the review body pay awards in Scotland. The allocations to individual health boards were given in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 5 July, col. 522. Since the allocations have not been separated into pay increases for nurses and for other professionals, it would not be meaningful to express them as percentages of the pay bill for nurses. The SHARE formula was used for the allocation.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the advice he has given to health boards as to how nurse regrading should be carried out in order to keep costs within the cash allocated.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such advice has been issued. The guidance which has been issued to health boards is consistent with the grading criteria and definitions drawn up by the management and staff sides of the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of voluntary, private and local authority residential care homes for elderly people in Scotland; and, in each case, what is the total number of places available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Residential homes for the elderly in Scotland
Places provided at 31 March 1987

	Number of homes	Number of places
Local authority	275	9,993
Voluntary	137	4,473
Private	134	2,274
Total	546	16,740

Rates

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average level of rates in Scottish local authorities for the current year; and what were the comparable figures in real terms (a) five years ago and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out below.

Average domestic rate bill in 1988-89 prices

1988-89	494
1983-84	389
1978-79	283

Note. The GDP deflator has been used to convert average rate bills to 1988-89 prices.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appeals against the refusal of planning permission by local authorities were made to him in the last 10 years for which information is available; how many of these were determined by written submissions; how many were determined by public inquiry; and how many were successful in either category.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Planning appeals determined under Section 33 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972

Year	Total	Determined on basis of written submissions		Determined after public inquiry
		Number	Number sustained	Number	Number sustained

(These figures exlude a small number of appeals which were dismissed for procedural reasons at an early stage in the process.)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many planning appeals have been determined by him or his predecessors and how many by delegated powers in the last 10 years for which information is available.

Planning appeals determined under Section 33 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972

1978	214	100

Note. These figures exclude a small number of appeals which were dismissed for procedural reasons at an early stage in the process.

Language Disorders

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the number of specialist teachers for children with language disorders, expressed in absolute terms and in pupil-to-teacher ratios, in each regional and island authority;

(2) if he will give the number of specialist teaching units at primary and secondary level for children with language disorders in each regional and island authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on specialist teachers and specialist teaching units for children with language disorders is not held centrally.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being done within his Department on the likely impact of a uniform business rate in Great Britain.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 July 1988]: My Department will be monitoring the effects of introducing uniform business rates south of the border, and will be considering the implications of this for Scotland.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update the information on net capital allocation figures for non-housing revenue account and housing revenue account for Scotland for each year since 1978-79, given in the answer of 26 October 1987, Official Report, columns 91 and 92; if he will reprice the figures for inflation; and if he will give the gross percentage change over the previous year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 July 1988]: The information requested is contained in the following tables. This relates only to the years since 1982-83 since that is when the net allocation system was introduced.

Scotland Non-HRA Capital Allocations

Year	Net £ million	Per cent. change	Net 1988-89 constant prices £ million

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Staff (Wages)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about National Health Service employees' wages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have received about 500 letters since the beginning of April about the pay of groups covered by Whitley councils; one third of these have been about the pay of medical laboratory scientific officers.

NHS (Complaints)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether health authorities will be responsible for dealing with complaints about services which they have contracted out, including complaints about services provided to National Health Service patients in non-National Health Service hospitals used on an agency basis.

Mrs. Currie: Where a complaint is made by a National Health Service patient the appropriate district health authority has a duty to investigate that complaint irrespective of the location where such treatment is provided.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards hospitals accepting and responding to complaints from people who are not patients at the hospital, including people who are on waiting lists, in the same manner as they deal with complaints from patients.

Mrs. Currie: The Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985 is concerned only with procedures for complaints about treatment received as an in-patient or an out-patient. However, we expect any other complaint directed to a health authority to be dealt with in accordance with the principles of circular HC(88)37, which was issued to all health authorities in June.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why circular HC(88)37 says that a complaint may be made on behalf of a patient only if the patient is unable to make a complaint, and not merely if he chooses to exercise that option; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The procedures are intended to enable individual patients to bring to the attention of health authorities aspects of their care about which they are unhappy. It is in keeping with this approach for complaints normally to be made by the individual concerned. However, help from others in drawing up their complaint is not precluded.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why circular HC(88)37 says that a complaint must be made with the consent of a capable patient concerned, irrespective of the validity of the complaint; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: It would be quite appropriate for a complaint about an individual's treatment to be made without their knowledge or consent.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether regional health authorities are intended to monitor complaints which they receive, on clinical matters or otherwise, in a similar manner to that specified for district health authorities; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) if he will issue directions to regional health authorities on managing their services in the same way as in the directions issued in annex A of HC(88)37, to district and special health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans to make further directions. We expect regional health authorities to follow the principles of HC(88)37 in dealing with complaints concerning their activities even though the services that they provide are not covered by the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has recently held with the medical defence societies regarding the investigation of complaints; and what undertakings they have given him on this matter.

Mrs. Currie: The content of circular HC(88)37 was fully discussed with representatives of the medical profession. The medical defence societies responded to the consultation exercise in October 1986. The complaints procedure set out therein is statutory, as required under the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on permitting a person who wishes to complain out of time to appeal to the health authority against a decision by the designated officer not to exercise a discretion to investigate his complaint; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: It is open to a complainant to appeal to a district health authority against a decision made by a designated officer. The exercise of this discretion is also a matter which can be investigated by the Health Service Commissioner.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State of Social Services what is his policy on all reports concerning the monitoring of complaints being made available to appropriate community health councils.

Mrs. Currie: Where a community health council assists an individual with his complaint, the council should be advised of the outcome.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the extent to which health authorities should normally receive reports about monitoring of complaints in the public part of their meetings, and reserve for private consideration only material which might identify an individual patient or innocent member of staff.

Mrs. Currie: In our view only information of a personal nature concerning specific complaints need be excluded from the public part of an authority meeting.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reissue circular HC(88)37 to include provision for a complainant to draw to the attention of a health authority shortcomings in the latter detailing the results of an investigation, and for the authority to investigate them further.

Mrs. Currie: The report of the designated officer represents a formal response on behalf of the health authority. However it is always open to a complainant to take the matter up with the chairman of the authority or to seek an independent investigation by the Health Service Commissioner, if they remain dissatisfied.

Hospital Responsibility

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representation he has had over the wording of the directives contained in annex A of HC(88)37 with regard to hospital responsibility for a hospital which is divided between more than one unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No representations have been received to date over the wording of the directions issued with circular HC(88)37. Our inquiries prior to the issue of the circular in June confirmed that the proposed procedures were in line with current practice in many health authorities. Regional health authorities have been asked to confirm by 26 August that the procedures, which are required to be in place by 29 July, have been implemented.

Physiotherapy

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average total cost of physiotherapy treatment per session in teaching and non-teaching hospitals, in London and outside London, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information on costs of physiotherapy treatment per session is not collected centrally.

For analyses of the average total cost per in-patient day or out-patient attendance across treatment and other departments—including physiotherapy and remedial gymnastics—by type of hospital in England as a whole and in Greater London, I refer my hon. Friend to tables included in the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns", the latest being for 1986-87, copies of which are in the Library.

Consultant Posts

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant posts in the northern region there are now; and how many there were in 1985.

Mr. Newton: The number of hospital medical and dental consultant posts (including vacancies) in the northern region as at 30 September 1985 was 921. The number of posts as at 30 September 1986, the most recent date for which figures are available centrally, was 951. Figures quoted have been rounded to the nearest whole-time equivalent. They include senior hospital medical and dental officers with allowance, as well as permanent paid, honorary and locum staff.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant vacancies are currently unfilled in the northern region; and how many of these have been unfilled for more than 12 months.

Mr. Newton: The number of unfilled consultant vacancies in the northern region as at 30 September 1986, the most recent date for which figures are held centrally, was 33, of which nine had been unfilled for 12 months or more. Figures quoted have been rounded to the nearest whole-time equivalent, and include vacancies where an appointment has been made but the holder has not taken up duty.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many junior hospital doctors in the northern region currently work in excess of 42 hours per week.

Mr. Newton: This information is not available centrally in the form requested. The average number of contracted hours of junior staff in the northern region was 85·8 hours per week as at 30 September 1986.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the membership of the working party to report to the Chief Medical Officer on the increase in infant mortality in 1986; and if he will publish the report when it is completed.

Mrs. Currie: The external experts consulted by the Chief Medical Officer were:

Experts
Professor Peter Pharoah	Department of Community Health University of Liverpool
Professor David Barker	Director MRC Environmental Epidemiology Unit Southampton General Hospital
The late Dr. Michael Alderson	MRC Environmental Epidemiology Unit Southampton General Hospital
Dr. Robert Sunderland	Consultant Paediatrician Springfield Centre Child Health Community Health Services Birmingham
Miss Alison Macfarlane	National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit Radcliffe Infirmary Oxford

Copies of the group's report have been placed in the Library.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement of progress on research into motor neurone disease and of support for the work of the Motor Neurone Disease Association.

Mrs. Currie: The Medical Research Council is the main Government body for biomedical and clinical research in this country and receives its grant aid from the Department of Education and Science. In the financial year 1986-87 the Medical Research Council's expenditure on research relating to motor neurone disease was approximately £280,000. I understand that the council is also supporting a considerable amount of basic and epidemiological research which may be of relevance to motor neurone disease.

I am aware of the work done by the Motor Neurone Disease Association to fund research into the cause and cure for this disease, and to provide care and support for sufferers and their families. The Department awarded the association a three year grant of £10,000 per annum from 1985-86 to 1987-88 to enable it to expand and develop its paitent care service. A further application for funding is currently under consideration.

Population Census (White Paper)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the White Paper on the 1991 census of population will be published.

Mr. Moore: The Government's proposals for a census in Great Britain on 21 April 1991 are published today in the White Paper, Cm. 430 which I have presented to Parliament in conjunction with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

The Government believe that the topics to be included in the census should be those most needed by central and local government, businesses and the professions. It also considers it essential that the census should be generally acceptable to the public and should not be an unreasonable burden on them. The proposals are based on these principles.

The proposed content is broadly similar to that of the successful 1981 census but with four additional questions. They are on central heating, long-term illness, hours worked and the term-time address of students. These will not add greatly to the time taken to complete the form and will provide important information. Other new features compared with 1981 include making a detailed count of dwellings, entering the postcode of each household address into the computer and asking people in housholds who were absent from their usual address on census night to complete a form from that address on a voluntary basis when they return. These changes will improve census coverage and make the results more useful.

A final census test will be held in April 1989. The main aim of the test will be to make sure that the procedures for delivery and collection of the forms will be effective. It will also be used to make a final assessment of the reaction of the public to the proposed questions and the effectiveness of publicity about the census. The areas to be included are Duns, North Berwick and parts of Edinburgh, Birmingham, Scarborough and the London boroughs of Merton and Wandsworth.

In its reply (Cm. 9238) to the Home Affairs Committee report on ethnic and racial questions in the census, the Government recognised that the committee had made a good case in principle for the inclusion of a question on ethnic group. Subsequent consultations with Government Departments and local and health authorities have confirmed the need for the kind of information such a question would provide for local areas. To do this, a question must be formulated in an understandable and acceptable way. OPCS has, through a series of tests and discussions organised with the help of the Commission for Racial Equality, developed a form of question that it believes to be the most likely to meet these criteria. The question is set out in the White Paper. The Government propose to include this question in the census test in April 1989 and to study the public response before deciding whether the question should be included in the final plans for the 1991 census.

The Census Act 1920 lays down strict safeguards of census confidentiality. The Government will not use the information gathered in the 1991 census about identified individuals for administrative purposes and will ensure that no organisation or person outside the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the General Register Office for Scotland has access to census information about identified individuals.

The British Computer Society has accepted an invitation to review the data protection, confidentiality and security arrangements for the 1991 census and the Data Protection Registrar has expressed support for this independent review. The findings will be published before the census.

The Government intend that, as in previous censuses, results from the 1991 census should wherever practicable be made available in a convenient form to meet users' needs, with a commitment where necessary by users to meet the costs. The particular priority will be to make key results for all local authorities available by May 1992 so they can be used in the revenue support calculations that year. Priority will also be given to results for health authorities.

After evaluation of the April 1989 test results, the Government will prepare a draft Order in Council and will lay it before Parliament for approval in accordance with the Census Act 1920.

Community Service

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to "Independent Living in the 1990s—The Consumer's View" published by Community Service Volunteers after consultation with other voluntary organisations about the review of community care by Sir Roy Griffiths; if there is any action he is taking or has already taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I understand that "Independent Living in the 1990s—The Consumer's View" was taken into account as part of the evidence submitted to Sir Roy Griffiths during his review of community care.

Health Authorities (Secure Provision)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the numbers of places in secure provision available in each district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of mental illness and mental handicap beds in secure accommodation in district health authorities at the end of 1986 are given in the table.

Latest available information relating to permanent regional secure units was provided in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 12 April at columns 111-12.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Moore: Over the past 12 months my Department has continued to identify ways to help small businesses. Specific measures which have been introduced include:

(i) In February 1988 a free advice line was set up to answer inquiries from business on the operation of National Insurance, statutory sick and maternity pay. This new service has been especially well received by small businesses with around 80 per cent. of calls coming from small firms.

(ii) Together with Inland Revenue we have produced a leaflet 'Employed or Self-employed' designed to be of help to people who may be unsure of their status for tax and National Insurance purposes. The new leaflet was issued in April. Further improvements in the guidance material issued to new employers are also being made.

(iii) From april 1988 a new improved system, family credit, has replaced family income supplement and will substantially increase help available for working families on low incomes. It is anticipated that many more self-employed people are likely to qualify under the new scheme.

(iv) Changes introduced in April have made it much easier for employers, particularly small employers, to set up their own company pension schemes. The conditions for contracting-out of the state scheme were simplified in November 1986 but in addition from 6 April 1988 employers were able to operate a new kind of occupational pension—a contracted-out money purchase scheme (COMPS). This has the advantage particularly for small employers of not imposing an open ended commitment. From July personal pension schemes were introduced which need not involve employers at all. A major national advertising campaign, part of which was specifically targetted at the small employer has been launched to tell business of these changes.

In addition we are taking positive steps to increase purchases from small firms and have set up a departmental purchasing and supply directorate, part of whose remit is to act as a focal point for small firms. The DTI publication, "Selling to the Public Sector" gives details of the contact point. Regional buying staff are making contact with local business or development associations. Training courses for purchasing staff point out the importance of small firms in increasing the supplier base and assisting the quest for value for money.

This represents a significant package of new measures to assist small businesses. My Department attaches particular importance to action in this area and continues to explore further ways to help small firms.

Consultants (Wakefield)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary for Social Services if he will instruct the Wakefield district health authority to supply the hon. Member for Wakefield with the names of those consultants whose opperating sessions were cancelled during the period 1 Aprl to 30 June 1986

Mrs. Currie: No.

NHS Contracts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many of the private companies specifically created to tender for National Health Service contracts no longer tender for such contracts.

Mrs. Currie: I am aware of no such companies.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list those companies which have more than 20 per cent. of the National Health Service catering contracts;

(2) if he will list those companies which have more than 20 per cent. of the Nationl Health Service laundry contracts;

(3) if he will list those companies which have more than 20 per cent. of the National Health Service cleaning contracts.

Mrs. Currie: No company has more than 20 per cent. of NHS contracts for catering, laundry and domestic cleaning contracts. Most contracts were won in-house.

Foster Carers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the average weekly allowance paid by local authorities to long-term foster carers, for each year since 1979;

(2) what was the average weekly allowance paid by local authorities to short-term foster carers, for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the average weekly allowance paid by local authorities to foster parents is not available centrally, nor is information that distinguishes the average weekly cost of boarding out children placed with short-term foster parents from the average weekly cost of boarding out children placed with long-term foster parents.

Details of the average weekly cost per child in care boarded by local authorities in England, based on net current expenditure are given in the table.

Family Practitioners

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to require family practitioner committees to collate the extent to which family practitioners advise patients to seek private consultation and treatment because of the length of time they would otherwise have to wait for a National Health Service consultation or National Health Service hospital treatment.

Mr. Newton: No.

Child Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take following the publication of the European Economic Community reports entitled "Caring for Children: Services and Policies for Childcare" and "Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom", and "Childcare and Equality of Opportunity: Consolidated Report to the European Commission" copies of which have been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 12 July at column 150.

Cook-chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will act to prevent the Wakefield district health authority and the Yorkshire regional health authority diverting financial resources from patient care to fund the introduction of a cook-chill system of catering.

Mrs. Currie: The catering system is part of patient care. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority and Wakefield health authority, as appropriate, for further details.

Disabled People (Legislation)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the reasons for the delay in implementing section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 originally intended to be brought into force in December 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Problems with coverage and timetables have delayed the planned production towards the end of this year of a report under section 11 of the Act based on new data collection systems for health and social services. We expect to produce a comprehensive report next year.

The most recent data, based on the old system of collection, on in-patient treatment of mentally ill and mentally handicapped people are already available in the Library—"Mental Handicap Hospitals and Units in England", bulletin 2/3/88 and "Mental Illness Hospitals and Units in England", bulletin 2/2/88.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what discussions he has had with voluntary organisations concerning implementation of section 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with voluntary organisations concerning implementation of section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what discussions he has had with voluntary organisations concerning regulations to be made under of sections 1 and 2 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: My predecessor met representatives of a number of voluntary organisations last year to discuss the implementation of various sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, and there has been subsequent correspondence. Implementation of each section of the Act can take place only as the necessary resources are identified and made available, and we shall have full discussions at the appropriate time about implementation of each of the remaining sections. We value the contributions of the voluntary organisations to this process and we are always happy to consider any views they may have on the implementation of any section of the Act.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the money allocated to local authorities in the current year for implementation of sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 is being spent on this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: It is for local authorities to ensure that they fulfil their statutory duties under sections 5 and 6 of the Act. The local authorities agreed this when they accepted the amount fed into the personal social services calculations for the additional costs of these sections. We are considering ways of monitoring the impact of the 1986 Act, however, and see the exercise that the social services inspectorate is planning as one of the ways of enabling this to be done.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list (a) the number of cases of toxic shock syndrome diagnosed in Britain for each of the last five years and (b) the number of deaths from toxic shock syndrome for each of the last five years;

(2) what proportion of the total number of cases of toxic shock syndrome over the last five years occurred in menstruating women using tampons.

Mrs. Currie: The information available centrally is that in the years 1982 to 1986 inclusive, for Great Britain, there has been one death identified with mention of toxic shock syndrome on the death certificate, that of a female in 1983.

Childhood Cancer

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recommendations he has received from the chief medical officer in the light of the report commissioned by East Yorkshire health authority on the incidence of childhood cancer on north Humberside; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This detailed report has been referred for expert advice before the chief medical officer makes any recommendations to Ministers. In the meantime, I note that the authors record a higher than expected, but small, number of tumours of the central nervous system, but not of leukaemia, which appear to be geographically based. They recommend further studies.

Charitable and Voluntary Payments

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how occasional charitable or voluntary payments are treated for income support and housing benefit purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The first £250 of such payments received in a 52-week period is treated as capital; and any excess is treated as income spread over the number of weeks remaining in that period.

Our monitoring of the operation of the scheme suggests this provision is proving difficult for claimants to understand and for staff to operate. In particular, it is causing administrative inconvenience for some charities. Therefore I propose to amend the regulations as soon as practicable to allow such payments to be treated solely as capital, so bringing the provision into line with the rules for family credit. We shall shortly consult the local authorities on the proposed change for housing benefit.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish the guidance given by the attendance allowance board to the doctors who, on its behalf, assess whether claimants to attendance allowance qualify for an award.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that the attendance allowance board "Handbook for Delegated Medical Practitioners" has now been published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office [ISBN O 11 321146 5], price £6·40. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Resource Allocation Working Party

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received the report of the working party on the resources allocation working party; if he will publish the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: [Pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1988 c. 559]: I am today publishing the NHS management board's final report on its review of the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula, which is used to calculate funding targets for regional health authorities in England. Copies of the report are available in the Vote Office.

The NHS management board was asked to explore the scope for improving the way in which the national RAWP formula measures relative need for health care across the country. The board's interim report, published in December 1986, considered each element of the formula, identified aspects where there was scope for improvement, and recommended a programme of analysis and research. That programme is now complete, and its results are set out in the final report. I am grateful to the management board for this comprehensive study.

The review of the RAWP formula was already close to completion when the Government began their wide-ranging review of the NHS. The Government will consider this report within the context of the wider review of the NHS.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 20 July 1988

PRIME MINISTER

Electoral Registration

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what are her proposals for preserving or extending the level of electoral registration.

The Prime Minister: The Government will continue the current efforts, including the annual publicity campaign, to encourage those entitled to do so to register for the vote. Research sponsored by the Home Office has identified a number of ways in which the level of registration could be improved; some of these have been put into effect and others are under active consideration. In particular, electoral registration officers are being encouraged to make more widespread use of personal, door-to-door canvassing.

We intend to introduce, in this Parliament, legislation to fulfill our commitment to enable more British citizens living abroad to register for the vote.

European Commission (Nominations)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria she uses when deciding which persons to nominate as United Kingdom members of the European Commission; and, in particular, how far previous ministerial experience is taken into account.

The Prime Minister: The same criteria which have been applied in the past, namely ability and experience. Most but not all previous United Kingdom Commissioners have had ministerial experience.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Empty Government Properties

101. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any new proposals to use empty Government-owned residential properties.

Mr. Major: No. It remains Government policy for dwellings that are identified as being surplus to operational requirements to be sold as quickly as possible.

Taxation

Mr. Alison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would have been the yield in a full year, under the tax regime applying in the year 1987-88, if the top tax rate of 60 per cent. had been raised to 100 per cent., on the assumption that those with incomes liable to taxation at 60 per cent. had taken no precautionary or offsetting steps to mitigate the extra impost.

Mr. Lawson: On the stated assumptions, the yield for a full year at 1987-88 income levels of raising the top rate of income tax from 60 per cent. to 100 per cent. is estimated at about £2 billion.

The calculation is based on a projection to 1987-88 income levels of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and the figure is therefore provisional. No account is taken of any behavioural changes that might result from such a measure, which would of course turn the notional additional yield into an actual reduction in yield.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in the real exchange rate against the deutschmark since (a) the fourth quarter of 1986 and (b) the fourth quarter of 1976.

Mr. Lilley: A choice of price indices for constructing real exchange rates is available in several international publications, including International Financial Statistics (IMF) and Main Economic Indicators (OECD). Nominal exchange rates are published daily in the national press.

Staff Training

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the staff in his Departments at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Brooke: In the 12 months to 30 June 1988, five people at grade 3 have attended courses or training exclusively on information technology management or awareness. Others have attended courses where these elements were part of the programme.

EC (Payment)

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the early payment of non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities in July.

Mr. Brooke: The European Commission estimates that its spending obligations during July will exceed the resources available for that month, leading to cash flow difficulties. In order to help ease these, and in accordance with article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, the Commission has requested member states to advance into July their payments of non-VAT own resources which would otherwise have been made in August. The Government are satisfied that the request complies with article 10(2).

The gross amount of the advance is £137 million. However, no payment will actually be made, today 20 July, in respect of the advance as two adjustments to the gross figure will be necessary:

(i) As I informed my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 29 March at column 397 in accordance with conclusions of the Brussels European Council of 11-13 February 1988 member states are entitled to deduct at source 10 per cent. of non-VAT own resources to cover collection costs. This replaces the previous arrangements whereby 10 per cent. of the amounts in question was refunded to member states;

(ii) an amount equivalent to the balance of the advance will be recovered from the outstanding amount of the Commission's borrowing under article 12(2) of Council regulation 2891/77.

The article 10(2) facility does not affect the total amount which the Community is authorised to spend during the year. The payment of levies and duties on 20 July will be reduced accordingly so that the Commission's request does not, therefore, involve any net addition to public expenditure.

Customs Clearance Depots

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish any comparable figures available to him on the number of inland Customs clearance depots in each of the member countries of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 12 July 1988]: I am not aware of any comparable figures for the number of inland Customs clearance depots in the member states of the European Communities.

VAT (Grave Headstones)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review his policy concerning the imposition of value added tax on headstones for graves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 July 1988]: This aspect of VAT has been reviewed on a number of occasions. My right hon. Friend has no plans for changes in this policy.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the estimated revenue in real terms from value added tax on headstones of graves in the United Kingdom for each of the years from 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many headstones for graves had value added tax levied in each of the years from 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 July 1988]: There are no official figures available either of the numbers of gravestones sold each year or of the yield in value added tax from their sale.

VAT (Self-Builders)

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of value added tax refund claims under Customs and Excise notice 719, refund of value added tax to self-builders, processed during the fiscal years 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 July 1988]: The number of do-it-yourself housebuilders claims processed in the fiscal years 1986-87 and 1987-88 was 8,950 and 9,254 respectively.

Payroll-giving Scheme

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was raised for charity through the payroll-giving scheme during the year up to April 1988; and what is the estimated total for 1988-1989.

Mr. Brook [holding answer 18 July 1988]: It is estimated that about £1 million was raised through the payroll-giving scheme during 1987-88, the first year of the scheme's operation. Donations in 1988-89 are expected to be considerably higher as the number of employers participating in the scheme continues to increase, but it is not possible to provide a reliable forecast at this stage.

TRANSPORT

National Maintenance Intervention Level

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring is carried out on the national maintenance intervention level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department prescribes standards and procedures for the maintenance of trunk roads, and determines priorities and funding. It entrusts its agents (principally local highway authorities) with the tasks of administering its requirements for monitoring road condition, identifying needs, letting contracts and supervising contractors. A technical audit system is being introduced to monitor routine maintenance work and improve efficiency.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received his consultant's further report on surface access to Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The report on the evaluation of consultation responses to the Heathrow surface access study is being published today by my consultants, Howard Humphreys and Partners. They prepared the report in association with the MVA Consultancy and Kennedy Henderson Limited.

The report analyses more than 100 comments made on the main study, which was published by the consultants in June 1987. The report finds virtually unanimous support for rail-based options, especially those involving a direct service between the airport and Paddington station.

The consultants examined five specific schemes proposed in response to the main study: for a direct rail link, put forward by BAA plc in partnership with British Rail; for improvements to the existing Underground connection, submitted by London Underground Limited; and for a number of people-mover options proposed by three private sector groups. The report concludes that, while several of the schemes could be viable, the option proposed by BAA and BR is the one most likely to meet objectives for a financially viable scheme, attractive to providers of private capital, increasing consumer choice, benefiting the maximum number of people and attracting passengers off the road.

The BAA/BR project would cost about £190 million and would be financed largely by the private sector. A new branch would be built off BR's western region main line into the airport with stations under the terminal buildings. Fast direct trains would operate between the airport and Paddington, providing a regular service modelled on the successful Gatwick Express. The journey time—including access to the passenger concourses—could be as little as 17 minutes to terminal one. The first train would run in 1993.

Special facilities at Paddington would be part of the scheme. BR has commissioned a study into pedestrian and vehicular movements within the station and on the approaches to it. I understand that discussions have already been held with Westminster city council, and that it will be consulted as the study progresses.

In the light of the consultants' report, I am giving my approval in principle to BR's participation in the joint venture and inviting it and BAA to work out detailed proposals. I shall want to see the maximum contribution from the private sector and a fully commercial return from British Rail. I understand that the promoters intend to deposit a private Bill in Parliament in November.

I wecome not only this exciting initiative, but the other imaginative proposals that were developed in response to the study. They serve to demonstrate the private sector's potential to solve transport problems and its strong interest in playing a part in future transport infrastructure projects. I congratulate the organisations involved on all their hard work and originality. The BAA and BR still have many matters of detail to resolve, and Parliament will be asked to consider the proposals once their Bill has been deposited. But we now have the prospect that Heathrow —the world's busiest international airport—will have passenger transport connections to central London fit for the 21st century. I am delighted to see the continuing involvement of the private sector in the country's transport infrastructure, following the example set by the Channel tunnel. I look forward to many more similar schemes.

I am placing copies of the consultants' report in the Library of the House. Copies are also being sent to those more closely involved. Further copies are available direct from the consultants.

In addition, I share the concern of the relevant local authorities, BAA and the road transport associations that some complementary improvements should be made to the road system around Heathrow. I am therefore commissioning two further studies.

First, I have appointed Howard Humphreys and Partners to develop for my consideration a consistent strategy for management of the motorway and trunk road network within the A4-M4 corridor. I want them to give particular attention to junction improvements, traffic management proposals such as those recommended in their Heathrow surface access study report, and variable signing to give travellers better information on road conditions.

My overall objective here is to improve the reliability of journey times from London to Heathrow. There will of course be co-ordination with the west London and south circular assessment studies that are already in progress.

Second, and following consultation with the local authorities concerned, I am now commissioning a review of access to Heathrow from the surrounding area and of orbital movement in the south-west quadrant of London within the M25 between the A23 and A40 (Hasquad). This part of London suffers from heavy traffic congestion.

The first stage of the Hasquad study will be to review the traffic related problems in the quadrant to the same time scale as the M25 review that I announced in April. On the basis of the results of the first stages of the Hasquad and M25 reviews, we shall ask the consultants to search for solutions on the M25 itself and on the departmental and local authority highway networks in a wider area either side of it.

This is an important package of initiatives to improve both public transport and road access to Heathrow. Taken together they should do much to reduce the access problems identified in the Eyre report, bringing valuable benefits to business and tourism, and to the economy as a whole.

Acle New Road, Norfolk (Dualling)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the case for dualling the A47 Acle new road between Great Yarmouth and Acle.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Norfolk county council, as the Department's agent, has carried out an assessment of the justification for dualling the A47 Acle new road. I have also seen the case for this improvement prepared by Great Yarmouth borough council. We shall consider the merits of this case along with the many competing claims at the next review of the trunk road programme.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to require new cars to be capable of using unleaded petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Interested parties are being consulted today on draft regulations which will require new vehicles to be capable of running on unleaded petrol. The proposals pick up the earliest dates permitted in community directive 88/76/EEC, which are:

Vehicle Size	New Type Approvals	All New Registrations
Large (>2000cc)	1 October 1988	1 October 1990
Medium (1400-2000cc)	1 October 1989	1 October 1990
Small (<1400cc)	1 October 1989	1 October 1990

The directive requires us to make special arrangements for the small number of vehicles that would need major engineering change to comply. The draft regulations allow for this.

Catalyst-equipped cars will be required to have narrow fuel filler inlets so that only the smaller nozzles fitted to unleaded petrol pumps can be used. All other vehicles will have the alternative of being marked to show that they can run on unleaded petrol.

We are also taking the opportunity to tidy up the gaseous emission regulations by eliminating the obsolete option of compliance with directive 78/665/EEC (or EEC regulation 15.03) from 1 October 1990. The draft regulations also formally recognise the emission limits in directive 88/76/EEC.

Roads

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report on progress on national road scheme completions since publication of the White Paper entitled "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" (Cm. 125).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Twenty-one national road schemes have been completed ahead of the original forecast completion date since the publication of "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" in April 1987.

Thirty-nine schemes have been completed in total. These are:

	Title	Completion date Forecast	Actual
M63	Stretford-Eccles Improvement Stage 3	August 1988	December 1987
A1	Baldersby Junction Improvement	October 1987	May 1987

A27

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Worthing of 24 June, Official Report, column 771, what steps he has taken to ascertain the views of those who would be affected by the road flyover at the Offington roundabout proposed by the consultants appointed to consider the future route of the A27, as to whether the public can express a considered view of the various alternatives until a scale model of the proposed flyover is made available; and if he will now provide an artist's impression of what the roundabout depicted on the front of the summary of the consultants' proposals would look like if their recommendations were accepted, together with a detailed elevation and other diagrams showing the kind of structure which his Department would normally build in a similar situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 4 July 1988]: The Department sent copies of the consultant's brochure to residents whose property could be required if the consultants' recommended route were built. The consultants sent about 80,000 letters to homes in the study area.

The information on display at the public exhibitions and in the consultants' report and brochure should be sufficient to enable members of the public to form a view on the recommendations, and to comment during the current consultation, which has been extended to 15 October, before we take a decision on whether to accept the consultants' findings.

The appearance of the flyover would depend on factors such as the precise alignment of the road and roundabout, the number and position of the supporting piers, any noise barriers, the construction materials, and so on, details of which are not known at this early stage. Any pictorial illustration produced at this stage could be misleading.

With this qualification, we are arranging for the preparation of an artist's impression of what a flyover at Offington roundabout might look like. Arrangements for its display locally will be announced as soon as possible.

Motorways (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the latest available 24-hour daily traffic flow for the following sections of motorway (i) M3 junctions 4 to 5, (ii) M25 junctions 3 to 4, (iii) M42 junctions 10 to 11, (iv) M11 junctions 8 to 10, (v) M23 junctions 10 to 11, (vi) M62 junctions 7/8 to 9, (vii) M61 junctions 6 to 7/8, (viii) M61 junctions 18 to 19, (ix) A1(M) junctions 31 to 32, (x) M2 junctions 4 to 5, (xi) M54 junctions 4 to 7 and (xii) M56 junctions 12 to 15.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated average daily flows (24 hours) for all motor vehicles are given in the table.

Motorway	Junction	Average 24 hour flow for all motor vehicles (1987)
M3	4 to 5	49,000
M25	3 to 4	55,000
M11	8 to 9	37,000
	9 to 10	21,000
M23	10 to 11	33,200
M62	7/8 to 9	43,500
M61	6 to 7/8	39,500
M2	4 to 5	26,000
M54	4 to 5	n/a
	5 to 6	18,800
	6 to 7	19,100
M56	12 to 14	55,000

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Freshwater Biological Association

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the proposal to close the Freshwater Biological Association station at East Stoke in Dorset; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My Department has received two representations about the proposal to close the Freshwater Biological Association station at East Stoke. The Natural Environment Research Council is considering improvements to its Institute of Terrestrial Ecology at Furzebrook, to accommodate staff from the Freshwater Biological Association. This would allow the sale of the association's site at East Stoke. I understand that staff support amalgamation with Furzebrook, and that NERC would retain essential freshwater research facilities at East Stoke.

School Milk

Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which local education authorities in England have (a) ceased and (b) continued to provide milk in schools since 1 April 1988.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not available at present. It will be collected in the October 1988 schools meals census, the results of which will be published in the spring of 1989.

Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he gives to school governors or head teachers on the possibility of procuring school milk from European Community sources where a local education authority does not make arrangements to provide such milk.

Mr. Dunn: This is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. I understand that information on the operation of the European Community milk subsidy scheme is circulated annually to LEAs by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce. It is for each authority to draw the scheme to the attention of the schools in its area.

Education (Inner London)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will amend the draft guidance on the transfer of responsibility for education in inner London to provide for cross-borough planning for educational provision for (a) pupils with physical disabilities, (b) delicate pupils, (c) pupils with hearing impairments, (d) pupils with visual impairments and (e) autistic pupils;

(2) what advice he has given the inner London boroughs subsequent to the publication of the draft guidance on the transfer of responsibility for education in inner London on the provision for pupils and students with special educational needs.

Mr. Dunn: The draft guidance was published as a basis for consultation with the inner London boroughs, with ILEA and with others involved in the education service in inner London. The Department has received a number of comments on the draft, some of which relate to provision for those with special educational needs. These will be taken into account in the final version of the guidance which my right hon. Friend will publish soon after the Education Reform Bill receives Royal Assent. In the interim, the Department has been in discussion with all the inner London boroughs on a range of educational issues, and has set up a working party to discuss the future of residential special schools outside the inner-London area.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of the Inner London education authority's centre for motor and associated communication handicaps—CENMACH—following the proposed abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that the centre is based at the Charlton Park special school in Greenwich but offers a service to physically handicapped children generally in ILEA. My right hon. Friend has indicated in the draft guidance on the transfer of responsibility for education in inner London that he would expect each inner London borough council to maintain any ILEA special school which is within its area. The development plans which boroughs have been requested to provide should state clearly the borough councils' intention with respect to any maintained special school in their area which services more than a local need.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library the text of the speech given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) to the conference on learning options held on 29 June and hosted by the Prince of Wales' advisory committee on disability; what further consideration he has given to the desirability of making regional arrangements in inner London for the purpose of providing special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I have arranged for a copy of the text of the speech to be placed in the Library of the House. The draft guidance on the transfer of responsibility for education in inner London makes clear the Government's view that where co-operative arrangements are considered by boroughs to be appropriate, they are likely to be most effective if they operate on a voluntary basis. Whether such arrangements are required in relation to particular aspects of provision is a matter on which discussions are continuing with the boroughs and ILEA.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the future of special education in inner London; what reply he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has received over 3,600 letters about our proposals to transfer responsibility for education in inner London to the inner London councils, since my right hon. Friend's announcement earlier this year. Some 300 of these made particular reference to special education, and covered a broad range of points, including the future of individual schools. Replies sought to explain the Government's view of the future arrangements for special education in inner London, as set out in the Department's draft guidance to councils.

Scottish Universities

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of Scottish domiciled students entering Scottish universities in each of the past five years came from (a) state schools and (b) fee-paying schools.

Mr. Robert Jackson [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The table shows the proportions of Scottish-domiciled entrants to Scottish universities in 1982-86 from different categories of educational institution:

Type of institution previously attended	1982 Per cent.	1983 Per cent.	1984 Per cent.	1985 Per cent.	1986 Per cent.
Independent school	4·6	5·1	5·2	5·6	6·1
Maintained school[1]	81·1	80·2	81·4	80·6	78·0
Further education	11·1	9·9	10·6	11·7	11·6
Unknown	3·2	4·8	2·8	2·1	4·3

[1] Includes grant-aided schools and a small number of Scottish domiciled students attending maintained schools in England.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total amount spent on overseas aid in 1978-79 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1988 prices; what is the estimated figure for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The public expenditure allocation for overseas aid (net aid programme) in 1978-79 was £715 million, or £1,533 million at 1988-89 prices. The comparable planning figure for 1988-89 is £1,307 million.

Since 1982-83 the aid budget has been maintained in real terms. It is now growing. The planning figure for 1988-89 is over £90 million more than we spent in 1987-88. The programme is planned to rise by a further £68 million in 1989-90 and £45 million in 1990-91.

Technical Co-operation Officers

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many technical co-operation officers are employed by the Overseas Development Administration; how many of them are engaged on contracts of up to six, 12 and 24 months, respectively; how many new technical co-operation officer appointments have been made in each of the last three years; and what is the current average time taken in recruiting and placing in post technical co-operation officers.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 31 December 1987 532 technical co-operation officers were employed by the Overseas Development Administration in posts overseas. Of these, 22 were engaged on contracts of up to six months, 17 on contracts of between six and 12 months, 115 on contracts of between 12 and 24 months and 378 were on contracts of 24 months or more.

356 TCOs were recruited in 1985; 469 in 1986; and 452 in 1987. The majority of these were recruited for short-term assignments, although the number of short-term TCOs in post at any one time is small.

Of the long-term appointments most are selected, accepted by the recipient Government and in post within about six months of the request to recruit being received by the ODA. But many recruitment requirements, both long and short term, are identified well in advance, so that our aim is to fill posts on time rather than to achieve any average period from request to placement.

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total cost to his Department of employing technical co-operation officers in each of the last three financial years, including all ancillary costs of recruitment, travelling, housing and administration and any host country costs; and what are the equivalent total costs for consultancy contracts.

Mr. Chris Patten: The cost of technical co-operation officers (including travel and housing but excluding recruitment, administration and training) in each of the last three financial years was as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	27·723
1985-86	30·185
1986-87	30·587

(figures for 1987-88 are not yet available).

In addition aid programme funds are used for certain recruitment expenses (including advertising) and for briefing and training. Figures for the last three financial years are as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	1·396
1985-86	1·517
1986-87	1·663

However, these figures include some expenditure on other staff which cannot readily be disaggregated.

Expenditure on consultants was as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	29·289
1985-86	30·175
1986-87	33·861

None of these figures includes expenditure met from FCO (including ODA) running costs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the balance of trade in manufactured goods between the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany for each year since 1970 expressed in 1987 prices.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trade in manufactured goods between countries is not available in terms of constant prices. The information is therefore not available.

British Telecom

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will invite the Director General of the Office of Telecommunications to review the activities and performance of British Telecom's international products and overseas division as part of its revision of British Telecom's price control formula, in view of the implications of the operating losses of this division for United Kingdom consumers of British Telecom's services;

(2) if he will invite the Director General of the Office of Telecommunications to seek from British Telecom, as part of its revision of British Telecom's price control formula, a published breakdown of the activities and financial results of its international products and overseas division.

Mr. Butcher: No. It is for the director general to determine how he excercises his functions under the Telecommunications Act 1984. His statement of 7 July explained the factors he had taken into account in reaching his view on BT's future price control formula.

The BT report and accounts for 1988 include information on the results and activities of these two divisions. The Director General of Telecommunications has powers to require BT to provide him with such further information as he may require.

Financial Services Act

Sir William Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to extend the Financial Services Act to cover deposit-based pensions, and in particular to ensure that these products are subject to those rules which apply to personal pensions sold under the Financial Services Act, under the headings: best advice, know your customer, suitability and disclosure.

Mr. Maude: I do not at present plan to do so.

Used Vehicles (Roadworthiness)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to empower trading standards officers to inspect used vehicles for sale on garage forecourts for roadworthiness; and what further steps he plans to take to deter the practice of clocking by used car dealers.

Mr. Atkins: Following a meeting which took place in December 1987 when my hon. Friends the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport met a delegation led by the Director General of Fair Trading, the director general set up a working party to examine these and other matters in greater detail. I understand that the director general's working party is aiming to produce a report on its findings in the autumn. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport and I will study the working party's report when it is available.

Balance of Trade (EFTA)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom balance of trade in (a) manufacturing and (b) generally, for European Free Trade Association countries, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the table.

Export Unit Values

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the International Monetary Fund trade-weighted relative export unit values for United Kingdom prices as of percentage of German prices compared with the same percentage figure in the Department of Trade and Industry figures for the last four available quarters and for (a) 1985, (b) 1981 and (c) 1976.

Mr. Alan Clark: The export-weighted relative export unit value indices published in the Department's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" are compiled by the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The comparison between these and the total-trade weighted relative export unit value indices compiled and published by the IMF is as follows:

Trade Deficit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the United Kingdom deficit on trade in manufacturing for 1988 with (a) West Germany and (b) the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department does not make such estimates. In the first five months of this year, there were crude deficits of £3·4 billion and £5·4 billion with the Federal Republic of Germany and the European Community, respectively.

Hearing Aid Council (Disciplinary Committee)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many cases the disciplinary committee of the Hearing Aid Council has heard in each year since its establishment;

(2) on how many occasions the disciplinary committee of the Hearing Aid Council has met in each year since its establishment;

(3) how many hearing aid dispensers, or firms employing hearing aid dispensers, have been struck off the register for each year since its establishment.

Mr. Butcher: The Hearing Aid Council is an independent statutory body and is not required to account to my Department for the exercise of its statutory functions. However I understand that the information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what estimate he has of the implications of the use of ETACS frequencies for mobile telephones for the compatibility of United Kingdom systems with other European Community systems after 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to seek powers to enable him to restrict the number of new mobile telephone users until system capacity has been improved; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has received any reports from Oftel on mobile telephone systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The proposed pan-European digital cellular radio system will begin operation in frequencies which are being reserved throughout Europe for the purpose. The use of ETACS frequencies for present analogue systems in the United Kingdom has enabled us to meet demand by the two United Kingdom operators for more capacity without prejudicing the frequencies being reserved for the common European system.

Because the operators compete on quality of service among other things, and the forces of competition have proved more than adequate in stimulating them to provide capacity. The United Kingdom has consequently more capacity, by a large margin, than any other European country. I have received no recent advice from Oftel specifically relating to mobile cellular telephone system.

Rover Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from British Aerospace in connection with the proposed takeover of Rover on the extent to which they will be permitted to merge the assets and liabilities of Rover Group with the contractual obligations connected with the supply by British Aerospace of Westland Black Hawk helicopters to Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Citizens' Band Radio

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further steps he is taking to reduce interference problems caused by non-approved citizens' band radio apparatus.

Mr. Butcher: I have tabled an order under section 7 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1967 banning the import, sale, manufacture or possession of 27 MHz citizens' band apparatus which cannot legally be used, and also updated regulations requiring that 934 MHz CB equipment conforms to the appropriate specifications. The widespread sale of unapproved apparatus has led to interference to authorised radio services including, most seriously, to emergency services. The introduction of these measures will ensure that unapproved equipment is removed from the market and that the range of approved equipment covers the new CEPT CB radio service, in harmony with the rest of Europe.

Voluntary Restraint

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 478, what was the outcome of discussions between the footwear industry and their Republic of Korea counterparts on reviewing the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been informed that the outcome of the discussions between the United Kingdom footwear industry and their Republic of Korea counterparts was the termination of their inter-industry agreement.

Airbuses

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assurance the new financial controller of the Airbus project has received on the extent to which he will be advised of the nature and extent of the financial aid given by the three other nations participating in the project; and if it is his intention that this information will be published in any form.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 19 July 1988]: The financial controller of Airbus Industrie has yet to be appointed. I do not envisage that the financial controller would be involved in the aid offered by Governments to the industrial partners in Airbus Industrie.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will invite Commissioner Sutherland to inquire into the aid given by member states to the production of the Airbus project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 19 July 1988]: No. Aid offered to the Airbus partners by the Governments of France, West Germany and Spain is a matter for those Governments.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the credit terms, and payments arrangements for the Airbus project with general agreement on tariffs and trade obligations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 19 July 1988]: Assistance provided by the Government to British Aerospace plc in connection with its participation in Airbus programmes is fully consistent with the Government's obligations arising under the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Vanguard System

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many hours of consulting work were provided for the United Kingdom economy as a result of the Vanguard system.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 19 July 1988]: During the early part of the Vanguard awareness programme, free advice on the use of value added and data services was offered to firms in the United Kingdom. Between October 1986 and May 1987, some 900 firms were given 7,440 hours of consultancy services. Advice on the use of financial and information systems, which includes value added and data services, is now available to small and medium sized firms under the enterprise initiative.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all those cases of suspected fraud currently under consideration by the serious fraud office.

The Solicitor-General: Sixteen separate cases involving a total of 40 defendants are being prosecuted by the serious fraud office and are currently before the courts.

There are a number of other cases in which warrants for arrest or extradition have been issued, but not served; or which are still under investigation and in which no proceedings have been instituted. It would not be appropriate to identify such cases, as to do so might either attract adverse publicity to persons whom future inquiries may exonerate; or frustrate inquiries before suspected wrongdoers are apprehended.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a table of the number of appeals to the immigration appeal tribunal allowed and dismissed in 1987 and in the first quarter of 1988.

The Attorney-General: The figures requested are shown in the table.

Period	Appeals allowed	Appeals dismissed
1987	171	319
First Quarter 1988	46	78

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a table showing the number of appeals to immigration adjudicators allowed and dismissed in 1987 and in the first quarter of 1988, broken down according to the nationality of the appellant and the type of decision appealed against.

The Attorney-General: The immigration appellate authorities record the nationality of appellants to the adjudicators in only five categories: appellants from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, EEC countries, and all other countries. They record 15 categories of appeal type. The figures sought, broken down in these categories, are shown in the tables.

EMPLOYMENT

Taxi Drivers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which local authorities have been approached by his Department with the request to provide their lists of taxi driver licences.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Centre for the Unemployed, Torquay

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the Manpower Services Commission's decision to withdraw financial support for the centre for the unemployed at Factory row, Castle Circus, Torquay.

Mr. Nicholls: No final decision about the future funding of this project has been made. Negotiations to enable smaller community programme sponsors to sub-contract with employment training managers to offer project-based training places will take place once the award of contracts to training managers has been agreed.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the results of the study into repetitive strain injury at the university of Birmingham and the Institute of Occupational Health in Edinburgh.

Mr. Nicholls: The findings of the study at the university of Birmingham are due to be reported in about a year's time and those of the study at the Institute of Occupational Medicine in Edinburgh should be reported later this year.

MSC Initial Training Scheme

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what exemption criteria exist for entry into the Manpower Services Commission initial training scheme for young people on day care programmes which are a condition of a supervision order, ordered by the courts as an alternative to a custodial sentence.

Mr. Cope: All young people under the age of 18 are covered by the Government's guarantee of a place on the youth training schme if they want one. This includes those who are subject to a supervision order, provided that the conditions of such an order do not prevent them from taking up a YTS place. The Training Commission's planned initial training scheme will be part of YTS and as such participation will be voluntary. However it will be limited to young people who show a clear need for special preparatory training and assessment prior to going onto a full YTS programme.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report all the exempted categories of persons in the Manpower Services Commission initial training scheme.

Mr. Cope: The Training Commission is planning to introdue an initial training scheme within the youth training scheme. Initial training is not intended to be a facility open to all young people generally, but to provide short duration training and assessment for those who are eligible for YTS but who need help to overcome particular difficulties or problems before they go onto the full scheme.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the estimated number of unemployed adults aged (i) 16 years, (ii) 17 years and (iii) 18 years (a) in total, (b) by unemployment benefit office and (c) by administrative region.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants, in the United Kingdom and for each of the standard regions, in the requested age groups on the latest available date, 14 April 1988. The information is not available for unemployment benefit offices except at disproportionate cost.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to make career development loans available nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: From today career development loans are available throughout Great Britain. We have piloted career development loans from April 1986 in four areas. Evaluation has shown that they are a very useful addition to the training infrastructure of the country. During the pilot a total of almost £1·4 million pounds has been lent to more than 650 people to undertake a wide range of vocational training. Career development loans will continue to be run in partnership with the three banks which participated in the pilot, Barclays, the Clydesdale and the Co-operative. Anyone aged 18 or over who lives or intends to train in Great Britain will be able to apply. The Government provide an incentive to borrowers by paying the interest on the loan during the period of training and for up to three months afterwards and guarantee a proportion of the loans to make it easier for the banks to consider lending for vocational training. The costs of the expanded scheme will be met from within the existing resources of the Department.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Copyright

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will place in the Library copies of European Commission Document Com (88) 172 (final) (Green Paper on Copyright).

Mr. Wakeham: I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster arranged for two copies of that document to be placed in the Library earlier this week.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Subsidised Milk

Mr. Ground: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which local education authorities in England have bought subsidised milk under the European Community subsidy scheme since April 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Claims for school milk subsidy in respect of milk supplied during April 1988 may be received up to 31 October 1988. To date the following local education authorities in England have submitted claims in respect of milk purchased under the European Community subsidy scheme since 1 April:

Avon	Leicestershire
Berkshire	Manchester
Bolton	Oldham
Bury Metropolitan	St. Helens
Cheshire	Solihull
Cleveland	Staffordshire
Doncaster	East Sussex
Gateshead	West Sussex
Havering	South Tyneside
Kent	Wolverhampton
Leeds	North Yorkshire

Agriculture Council

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council in Brussels on 18 and 19 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: As I said in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 20 June, final agreement on the Community's farm support prices and related measures for 1988-89 could not be reached because of last-minute objections raised by the Greek Minister. Although it was thought that further discussion on 23-24 June, which led to proposals voted on at the Fisheries Council meeting on those days, had overcome the difficulty, this subsequently proved not to be the case due to a disagreement about the interpretation of the relevant text.

I am glad to say that at this week's meeting of the Council of Ministers, at which I represented the Government, the Greek problem was resolved in a way which was satisfactory to the United Kingdom and fully met our objectives. The decisions on prices and other measures will therefore now come into effect as described in my reply of 27 June to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell).

The Council also reached agreement, subject to receiving the opinion of the European Parliament, on contributions from the Community budget on two disaster aid packages, first towards the cost of assistance to olive producers in Greece who were affected by unusually severe frosts last March and second towards the cost of making good damage from last year's flooding in parts of Spain.

WALES

M4

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the latest available traffic flow figures for each link of the M4 motorway in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Traffic flows have been recorded for a 12-hour period between 7 am and 7 pm on a weekday and the latest available figures for each section of the M4 motorway are as follows:

M4 Sections	Traffic flows and dates recorded

Computer Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are currently 277 computer work stations in my Department and a further 30 machines which are used only for word processing, but which could be converted into work stations. The ratio of work stations to civil servants is 1:8. In five years' time I expect the ratio to be in the order of 1:3.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department's strategic IT committee is chaired by the principal establishments officer and has eight other members repreenting (at senior level) major users, IT specialists and the Central Computer and Telecomunications Agency. Neither I nor my ministerial colleagues attend its meetings.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the staff in his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses of training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Walker: Five out of the 14 officers at these grades have attended a senior management tutorial on information technology in the last 12 months.

Farming

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify the number of farmers engaged in (a) lamb, (b) beef and (c) cereal production in Wales during each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not available in exactly the form requested but the numbers of holdings engaged in the three enterprises are given in the table:

Number of main holdings with:

	Sheep and Lambs	Beef Breeding Cows[1]	Cereals
1979	16,865	13,301	7,383
1980	16,181	12,543	7,211
1981	16,190	12,139	6,750
1982	16,304	11,839	6,432
1983	16,452	11,303	5,758

Welsh Plant Breeding Station

Mr. Geraint Howells To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the present state of the Welsh plant breeding station, Crogerddan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh plant breeding station is part of the Agricultural and Food Research Council's institute for grassland and animal production and as such is the responsibility of that research council. The Government are considering overall the research and development programmes of the agricultural departments to establish those areas of research which should more appropriately be funded by industry. No decisions have yet been taken and it is too early to say what the effects will be on individual establishments.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hearing therapists are currently employed by the National Health Service in Wales; and how many were employed in each year since 1980.

Mr. Grist: There are currently three hearing therapists employed in the National Health Service in Wales with a further two due to complete their training shortly. Information for earlier years is not held centrally.

Gravel Extraction (Llay)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet residents and councillors from the Llay area concerned at proposals to extract gravel from the Coed Mawr and Balderwood quarries and about the impact on the local environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No. This is a matter for the mineral planning authority, Clwyd county council.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will give the number of psychiatric hospitals in each area for each year since 1974 to April 1988; and what is the number of beds in each hospital.

Mr. Grist: The table shows the hospitals classified as psychiatric (mental illness and mental handicap) with the number of staffed beds allocated as at 31 March each year. It should be noted however, that other non-psychiatric hospitals have psychiatric beds.

In-patients

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of in-patients in each area authority, for each year since 1974 until the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the Welsh Office publication "Bed Use Statistics", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Acute Hospital Beds

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the average daily occupancy of acute hospital beds in Wales, by area and age groups (a) 0-four years, (b) five to 14 years, (c) 15 to 44 years, (d) 45 to 64 years, (e) 65 to 74 years, and (f) 75 years plus, for each year since 1974 to the last year for which the figures are available.

Mr. Grist: Information in the form requested is not available. However, figures for the occupancy of in-patient beds, analysed by district health authority and by specialty are published in annual volumes of "Bed Use Statistics", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Welsh Language

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his reply of 14 July, Official Report, column 351, he will now make a statement in relation to the further discussion he had with the working group he established to advise him on issues relating to the Welsh language.

Mr. Peter Walker: The working group of eight eminent Welsh speakers which I established to advise me on matters relating to the Welsh language recommended the establishment of a special body to co-ordinate activity, offer advice, consider the best ways of marketing the language and to begin work on reviewing existing legislation with a direct bearing on the Welsh language.

I have discussed this with the working group and have decided to accept its proposal. I shall therefore set up a Welsh Language Board—Bwrdd yr Iaith Gymraeg.

This will have the positive and practical task of:

Developing voluntary codes of practice on the use of Welsh in the public and private sectors;

Advising on the use of Welsh in public administration;

Investigating complaints, and discussing such complaints with the parties involved and advising on practical solutions where possible;

Reviewing and reporting on grant supported activity;

Liaising with statutory and non-statutory bodies on language issues;

Advising the Secretary of State for Wales on matters relating to the Welsh language and considering specific issues referred to it by the Secretary of State.

The board will be set up in the very near future and I am delighted to say that Mr. John Elfed Jones has accepted my invitation to be its chairman. His fellow advisers were united in recommending that he should be the first chairman. I was delighted to agree with their recommendation because he is a man who is known in the Principality for getting things done. The board will work through a limited number of specialist sub-committees concentrating on defined areas and issues initially related to:-

the promotion of the Welsh language;

the use of the Welsh language by local authorities and public bodies;

the use of the Welsh language in the private sector;

proposals for legislation.

The board's secretariat will be provided initially by staff seconded from the Welsh Office. Administrative costs will be met by the Welsh Office and the funding of any projects which the board itself might wish to undertake additional to those which I presently support will be considered on their merits.

There is, I believe, a great deal that this board can do to secure a fine future for the Welsh language. What is achieved will depend largely on the effort which the board and its sub-committees put into the task—and the co-operation of the people of Wales. I am grateful to the group for its work and am pleased that I have its unanimous support for this proposal.

Hospital Staff (Gwent)

Sir John Stradling Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of staff at each hospital in the Gwent health authority at the latest date available, together with the same figures for five and 10 years ago, respectively.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 18 July 1988]: The information requested is not available prior to 1980, but the following table gives the whole-time equivalent staff in post by category of staff and in total at September 1980, 1982 and 1987.

[1] Because figures are based on NHS pay records, they reflect staff paid at each hospital. It is not possible to make adjustments for staff who, whilst being paid at one hospital, spend part of their working time at other(s).

[2] Learners are excluded because they are mostly paid (ie recorded) at one central point in the district health authority and it is not possible to break down their numbers by hospital.

[3] Medical and dental staff are excluded for the same reason as given in note [2].

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disabled People

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to create an equal opportunities commission for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: No. In a statement to the House on 15 July 1987, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State indicated that after considering the responses to the consultative paper on equality of opportunity in employment in Northern Ireland, he had decided to concentrate legislative and other action on the vital religious issue and that equality of opportunity in relation to sex and disability should continue to be addressed in the same way as in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Criminal Law Reform

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals for the reform of the general criminal law in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: A proposal for a draft Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order has been published today by the Northern Ireland Office.

The order introduces a number of significant reforms to the general criminal law in Northern Ireland, (as distinct from the emergency law) which are broadly in line with those which have already been adopted in England and Wales by way of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. The order provides the police with a range of new powers governing stop and search; entry, search and seizure; and arrest. But it carefully regulates these powers to ensure that they are used sparingly, responsibly and fairly.

The order balances the broadening of police powers by providing a comprehensive series of new safeguards to persons suspected of crime. In addition, it provides for the issue of codes of practice, replacing the judges' rules, and which will supplement the protection afforded to suspects, and clarify the duties and responsibilities of the police.

Furthermore, the order introduces measures to reform the law on evidence; provides for arrangements to be made to obtain the public's views on policing; and gives the Secretary of State power to set up an inquiry into any matter affecting policing in Northern Ireland.

Copies of the proposal for a draft order and the explanatory document have been placed in the Vote Office.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passports

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average time taken for the issue of a full British passport.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I give to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 19 July.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to pay interest to a constituent of the right hon. Member for Worthing, who applied for a passport on 28 January, has yet not received any acknowledgement or a passport, but whose cheque paying for it was cashed on 25 February.

Mr. Renton: No. If my right hon. Friend will let me know his constituent's full name, date of birth and the office to which the application was submitted, urgent inquiries will be made to establish why he has not had any response to his passport application.

Offences Against Children

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research or statistical evidence is available on involvement of voluntary workers in offences committed against children.

Mr. John Patten: The Department is currently collecting from police forces, statistical data on the relationship between victim and offender in offences against children which result in a court appearance.

Police Checks (Employment)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, under the arrangements for police checks on those seeking work with substantial access to children, the police will be expected to notify the employer that the individual was known to be homosexual, if the individual has no convictions, cautions or bindovers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under paragraph 7 of Home Office circular 45/1986, information other than convictions, cautions and bindovers may only be released on the authority of an officer at assistant chief constable level or above. I understand that information that a person was known to be a homosexual would not on its own justify disclosure under the arrangements for police checks on those seeking to work with children.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there are in each South Yorkshire police division; and by what percentage the crime rate has fallen or risen since these schemes began.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the chief constable of South Yorkshire that the first neighbourhood watch schems in his police force area was established in June 1984 and that by the end of June 1988 the total number of schemes had increased to 718. The following table shows the number of schemes in each police division:

Division	Number of neighbourhood watch schemes
Doncaster	152
Barnsley	76
Rotherham	63
West Bar	44
South Sheffield	241
North Sheffield	142
	718

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is considering asking the insurance companies to offer special rates to neighbourhood watch scheme members.

Mr. John Patten: A number of insurance companies already offer discounts or other incentives to policyholders who belong to neighbourhood watch schemes and—or take certain security precautions. We welcome such initiatives; and we take the opportunity of regular contacts with the Association of British Insurers to encourage further moves of this kind.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of proven claims of racial discrimination and what percentage this was of the number of cases investigated, for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: Redress for racial discrimination in employment may be sought through industrial tribunals; and in relation to other matters through the courts. It is for the aggrieved individual to initiate action. This may be done with the help of solicitors, trade unions, the Commission for Racial Equality or in other ways. Allegations may well be settled without recourse to a tribunal or court. There is therefore no comprehensive measure of claims of racial discrimination.

Statistics on applications for assistance from individual complainants about racial discrimination received and considered by the Commission for Racial Equality are given in the commission's annual reports, copies of which are available from the Library.

There are no centrally collected statistics of court cases involving claims of racial discrimination. Statistics available under a new system introduced from 1 April 1985 show that the following applications were registered with industrial tribunals:

	1985-86	1986-87
(a) Number of applications	649	672
(b) Number of ACAS conciliated settlements	96	95
(c) Withdrawals (not via ACAS)	245	256
(d) Number reaching a hearing	308	321
(e) Number successful after a hearing	60	40
(f) (e) as percentage of (d)	19·5 per cent.	12·5 percent.

ACAS officers have a duty to consider whether they can help parties reach a settlement without the need for a hearing. The figures for applications withdrawn without a hearing will also include some cases where a settlement was reached other than with the help of ACAS.

Mr. J. Bas

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. J. Bas of 20 Waverley gardens, Etchingham, Rugeley, is likely to have his application for naturalisation as a British citizen processed, reference No. B 424936.

Mr. Renton: The application has been approved, and Mr. Bas was invited to take the oath of allegiance in January 1988. There may have been some confusion over his address and he will now be invited to take the oath again.

Merseyside (Crime Statistics)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what have been the levels of crime and the clear-up rates on Merseyside over the last four years;

(2) if he will make a statement on the way which crime statistics are collected on Merseyside.

Mr. John Patten: Figures on notifiable offences recorded by the police in Merseyside are published annually in chapter 2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—in table 2.4 of the issue for 1986, Cm. 233, which is the most recent. The figure for 1987 was published in "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 6/88" and will be included in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1987" later this year: copies of these publications are available in the Library. The clear-up rate for Merseyside was 41 per cent. in 1984, 35 per cent. in 1985, 37 per cent. in 1986 and 43 per cent. in 1987. The clear-up rate for 1986 was also published in Cm. 233 and for later years will be published in subseequent issues.

All police forces in England and Wales provide the Home Office with statistics on notifiable offences recorded by the police according to a common set of reporting and counting rules. Offences may be cleared up in several ways, for example by charge/summons, by caution, being taken into consideration by the court and other methods including visits to convicted prisoners. Figures for each category vary between forces according to local circumstances and practices.

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much he has allocated for victim support schemes in the current year.

Mr. John Patten: £2·55 million in the financial year 1988-89.

Prisons

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proposed height limit in the proposed prison department design brief for inner multi-storey prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no intention to provide a design brief specifically for inner city multi-storey prisons. The prison department design briefs which are being developed will provide a basis for building prisons of all kinds on the assumption that individual units of living accommodation should not exceed two storeys. Whether or not such units may be "stacked" to create high-rise buildings will depend in each case on factors such as cost effectiveness and operational viability, taking account of location and possible planning difficulties. These factors will also be taken into account in assessing any proposals for urban remand centres likely to be made in response to the recent approach to the private sector by the prisons building board.

Keith Bennett

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester as to what further steps the police are taking to locate the remains of Keith Bennett, murdered by Ian Brady and Myra Hindley, and as to which officer is now in charge of the inquiries; what further consideration he has given to the request from the chief constable of Greater Manchester for the use of hypnosis in seeking to establish the general area of Keith Bennett's burial; what representations he has received from the relatives of Keith Bennett; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Greater Manchester police that all the available evidence about the location of Keith Bennett's grave has been thoroughly investigated and that the police do not intend to take any further action unless new information is received. Should the chief constable consider further inquiries justified in the future, it would be for him to decide which of his officers should supervise them.

In response to a request from the chief constable of the Greater Manchester police and representations from Mrs. Johnson, Keith Bennett's mother, my right hon. Friend has given very careful and serious consideration to a request from Miss Hindley that she should be hypnotised. She hoped that in that way she might be able to remember more precise details of the place where Keith's body is buried. Its general area is already known. We have been most anxious that every practicable effort should be made to find Keith's body so that it may be given a proper burial. That is why my right hon. Friend twice authorised visits to the moor by both Myra Hindley and Ian Brady. But on the basis of the information available we have not been persuaded that hypnotising Myra Hindley is likely to produce information which would be of material assistance in identifying more accurately the location of Keith's grave. Quite independently of this case, we are about to issue a circular to the police warning against the use of hypnosis in criminal investigations.

We have received two letters from Mrs. Johnson, and letters from Mrs. M. Prescott, Keith's sister, and Mr. A. Bennett, Keith's brother.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance on grounds of special hardship on (a) all grounds and (b) grounds connected with an asylum application were (i) received and (ii) granted, by country, during 1987 and the first quarter of 1988.

Mr. Renton: The number of entry clearance applications where special hardship is a consideration is not separately identifiable in the returns sent by entry clearance posts to the Home Office.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance as working holidaymakers have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused in (i) India, (ii) Bangladesh, (iii) Australia and (iv) Canada.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the maximum, minimum and average times taken between the deferral of a decision on a settlement application and the interviewing of the sponsor in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children were waiting in each queue at each post in the Indian sub-continent on 31 March.

Mr. Renton: Information on the total numbers in each queue is given in the table; separate information on men, women and children is not available centrally.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were waiting for special quota vouchers in (i) India and (ii) East Africa in (a) May 1987 and (b) December 1987; when those issued with vouchers on those dates had applied; how many vouchers were issued in (y) India and (z) East Africa in (1) 1987 and (2) the first quarter of 1988; when those applying now can expect to receive vouchers; and how many applicants there were for vouchers in (i) India and (ii) East Africa in (A) 1987 and (B) the first half of 1988.

Mr. Renton: The information which is currently available centrally is given in the tables:

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance as (a) wives, (b) husbands, (c) fiancés and (d) fiancées in each British post in all countries apart from those of the Indian sub-continent were (i) granted and (ii) refused, for each quarter since January 1987; how many such applications in each category, at each post and in each quarter were refused (1) wholly and (2) partly because of the primary purpose rule; what was the refusal rate at each post; and what percentage of those refusals were (A) wholly and (B) partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Renton: The only information requested which is available centrally is that on applications granted and refused in Hong Kong, and is given in the table:

Polygamous Wives

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of potential polygamous wives were referred to him for a decision during 1987-88; and what on average was the length of time taken for a decision to be passed to the overseas post.

Mr. Renton: From 1 January 1987 to date, 152 applications for polygamous wives were referred to me or my predecessor for decision. The other information is not available.

Registration and Naturalisation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken to process applications for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation; and how long those applying in both of those categories in December 1987 may expect to wait.

Mr. Renton: The average time taken to complete applications for citizenship granted in June 1988 was 11 months for registration and 18 months for naturalisation.

Good progress continues to be made in reducing delays since the measures which I announced on 19 April in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) at column 410.

All citizenship applications received before 31 December 1987 were acknowledged and passports and other documents returned to applicants by the end of April 1988. All immigration correspondence is now opened on the day of receipt and all nationality applications within a few days.

At the end of March the Department had some 268,000 outstanding citizenship applications including over 80,000 naturalisation applications and over 187,000 for registration as British citizens. Since the end of March, nearly 20,000 cases have been completed.

Our progress will accelerate when we open our new nationality office in India buildings, Liverpool where the local passport office is also situated; 130 staff are being recruited to man the office, which is due to open, after staff training, on 5 September. By about the end of the year, this will increase our nationality caseworking staff by over 80 per cent. and initially the whole of this additional capacity will be devoted to processing registration applications.

A substantial proportion of the applications for registration will be decided by April 1989 and the remainder during the following year.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his best estimate as to how many applications for (a) adult registration with entitlement, (b) naturalisation and (c) registration of minors his Department (i) will receive and (ii) expects to grant, in 1988-89.

Mr. Renton: Our rough estimate, which is subject to error, is that in financial year 1988-89 we will receive the following applications:

	Number
Registration of adults	3,000
Registration of minors	12,000
Naturalisation	31,000

We estimate that in the financial year 1988-89 we will grant 60,000 registrations of all kinds, and 33,000 naturalisations. Full output from the Liverpool nationality office will be achieved towards the end of 1988. Its main effects will be felt in 1989-90, when we hope it will grant registration applications in excess of 7,000 each month.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 have been (a) made, (b) granted and (c) refused; and how many of those granted have been on the grounds of service in the armed forces.

Mr. Renton: The information covering the period January 1983 to June 1988 is as follows:

	Servicemen	Others	Total
Received	47	498	545
Granted	46	7	53
Refused	—	485	485
Withdrawn	1	—	1
Still under consideration	—	6	6

Note: The numbers in the first column are former service men in Hong Kong as described in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) on 23 April 1986 at columns 147-48.

Arranged Marriages

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters of representation he received during (a) 1986, (b) 1987 and (c) 1988 to the latest convenient date, from or on behalf of women who expressed reluctance to undergo a marriage with a man from abroad; and how many of these in each year referred to men from the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Renton: The information is not available as requested.

Sheep Dipping

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify the number of farmers prosecuted for failing to dip their sheep in each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available from the records held centrally.

Section 11 Funding

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe his Department's procedures for dealing with (a) bids by local authorities for section 11 funding with respect to education and (b) claims by local authorities for approved section 11 expenditure with respect to education, stating the average time taken by these procedures in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 July 1988]: Applications from local authorities for section 11 grant are considered by officials to establish whether they meet the criteria set out in Home Office circular 72/1986. Particular attention is paid to whether the proposed posts address clearly identified special needs of communities of Commonwealth origin; the specification of duties; consultation with relevant communities; and whether the authority has devised satisfactory objectives, performance indicators and monitoring arrangements so that effectiveness in meeting special needs can be assessed. Where specialist education advice is required, the views of the Department of Education and Science will be sought. Where necessary local authorities are asked for further information. All recommedations for approval of new applications are considered by Ministers.

In respect of all applications decided during the first six months of 1988, the average period between receipt of the application and notification of the decision has been between six and seven months. Separate information on the average time taken to decide education applications is not readily available.

Claims for grant for approved posts are submitted by authorities between July and September each year. The claim form gives the actual expenditure in the preceding financial year, and estimates for the following two years. The claims are checked against lists of approved posts. Grant is paid in quarterly instalments during the year to which it relates. Adjustments are made in the final quarter in the light of the latest estimate, and further adjustments may be made after the actual expenditure figure is received. All claims submitted in 1987 were cleared by the end of May 1988; the average time taken to clear each claim is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what delays have occurred in his Department's consideration of (a) recent bids for section 11 funding with respect to education and (b) recent claims for such approved expenditure by Oxfordshire county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 July 1988]: There has been correspondence since June 1987 about Oxfordshire county council's applications in respect of approximately 70 education posts. A continuing misunderstanding about whether most of these were in respect of new posts or unnecessary applications by Oxfordshire county council in respect of posts already approved has now been discovered, and officials will be meeting the council to clear up any remaining problems.

The grant claim sent in by Oxfordshire in October 1987 was dealt with in May 1988. The authority was told that a recovery of grant paid in respect of 1986-87 and 1987-88 was required. The authority has now been informed that the demand for grant repayment was based on a misunderstanding by them of the 1986 guidance on section 11 procedures. A problem of this kind has never happened before with any other local authority: officials are taking action to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish a table showing the number and approximate value of (a) outstanding bids by local authorities for section 11 funding with respect to education and (b) outstanding claims for approved section 11 expenditure with respect to education, stating the age of the oldest bid and the oldest claim; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a list showing the name of each local authority for which a bid for section 11 funding with respect to education is currently outstanding, stating the number of staff posts involved and the period of time covered by the relevant bid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 July 1988]: Bids for section 11 funding for education currently under consideration are of two types: applications for continued funding of existing posts arising from a review initiated in 1983, and applications for new posts under the current arrangements introduced in 1986.

At 30 June 1988 applications from the following education authorities were outstanding. Grant to most posts in education is not time limited, so the applications do not cover particular periods:

Authority	Number of posts
Review applications (4 authorities)
Inner London Education Authority	348
Haringey	122
Brent	53

Authority	Number of posts
Wakefield	2
Waltham Forest	6
Wiltshire	4
Wolverhampton	7
	666

In addition, Oxfordshire had submitted review applications for some 70 posts, but it has now been established that these posts were not subject to review.

Information on the value of outstanding bids by authority is not easily available and the cost of extracting it from all relevant sources would be disproportionate. Our estimate of the total potential amount of grant involved in the above applications is approximately £10 million.

The oldest of the education applications under the 1986 circular was submitted in February 1987; this is a large application which has required advice from the Department of Education and Science and further information from the local authority concerned.

There are no outstanding claims for grant in respect of approved posts.

Gaelic and Welsh

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the average audience figures achieved for the Gaelic programmes "Prosbaig" "Dotaman" and "Crann Tara" for (a) Gaelic speakers, and (b) all viewers.

Mr. Renton [pursuant to his reply, 14 June 1988, c. 97]: The BBC and Grampian Television have produced the following information for all viewers; there are no separate figures available for Gaelic speakers.

Average Audience Figures January-May 1988

Gaelic television programmes	All viewers
Prosbaig—BBC1 (Current affairs programme)	100,000
Dotaman—BBC1 (Programme for pre-school children)	100,000
Crann Tara—Grampian Television (News magazine programme)	[1]26,000

[1] Grampian Television's transmission area covers the north of Scotland only.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the average audience figures achieved for the three most popular Welsh language programmes on S4C amongst (a) Welsh speakers, and (b) all viewers.

Mr. Renton [pursuant to his reply 14 June 1988, c. 97]: The following information has been provided by S4C. The figures supplied are average audience figures for all viewers; separate figures for Welsh speakers are available only for a limited range of programmes. Several single event programmes, as opposed to regularly broadcast programmes, achieved viewing figures considerably higher than those given here. We understand that an average of 366,000 Welsh speaking viewers watched S4C at some point each week during the period January-May 1988.

Average audience figures January-May 1988

Welsh language television programmes	All viewers	Welsh speakers

SCOTLAND

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the consultants Pieda were appointed to consider the future of Caledonian MacBrayne; and when they are expected to report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Pieda was appointed in May 1988 to advise the Secretary of State on possible future arrangements for Caledonian MacBrayne in the light of the decision to privatise the Scottish Bus Group. Its report has now been received.

Skiing

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to announce support for skiing developments.

Mr. Lang: The Secretary of State is not at present considering any proposals. Government financial support for viable skiing developments is provided by the appropriate agencies, which can, within the limitations of delegated authorities, determine levels of assistance.

Mountain Areas (Erosion)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to prevent erosion in popular mountain areas; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Erosion in mountain areas, including the most popular, is caused to a very large extent by natural forces. The Countryside Commission for Scotland devotes considerable attention to ways of minimising erosion caused by human pressure on popular mountain areas. The commission is, for example, consulted about all significant planning applications, including proposals for hill tracks, in national scenic areas. In addition it has (a) spent approximately £120,000 to date on the upland footpath project; (b) published advice on the better construction of hill tracks; (c) commissioned research into methods of restoring vegetation on high ground; and (d) produced, jointly with Highland regional council, a manual of good practice in managing and developing ski-fields. The commission also has plans to study the present arrangements for managing the balance between recreation and countryside conservation, with particular reference to the Cairngorms. We shall consider carefully any recommendations rising from this exercise.

Aberdeen (Rates)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report, the yield of domestic rates, commercial and industrial rates in cash terms, and the proportion of expenditure this represents for Aberdeen city district council in each of the years 1978-79 up to and including 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Aberdeen

	(1) Domestic Rate Income	(2) Commercial Rate Income	(3) Industrial Rate Income	(4) Cols. 1+2+3 Rate Income as a percentage of Expenditure
1978-79	2·2	2·5	0·7	41·7
1979-80	2·8	3·1	0·8	44·9
1980-81	3·6	4·2	1·0	44·0
1981-82	5·5	7·2	1·5	58·6

1986-87	8·7	12·5	2·1	72·3
1987-88	8·1	11·6	2·1	61·7

Note:
Rate income is also received for public utilities and miscellaneous subjects.

Court of Session

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any plans to initiate a review of the procedures of the Court of Session.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate, who has ministerial responsibility for procedures in civil court proceedings, does not propose to initiate such a review. A working group set up by the Lord President is presently reviewing the rules of the Court of Session in order to recommend such changes in the rules as may be necessary to simplify procedures. A working party, chaired by Lord Jauncey, is reviewing procedures in patent litigation. Recommendations for the better use of in-court judicial time allocated to civil business were made by the review body on the use of judicial time in the superior courts in Scotland, chaired by Lord Maxwell, which reported in 1986. These recommendations are now being implemented.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any plans to increase the number of judges on the bench of the Court of Session; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The number of judges of the Court of Session has been increased from 21 in 1983 to 24 at present. Section 22 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1985 provides for the appointment of retired judges to act as temporary judges and this provision is used as required.

Staff Training

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the staff in his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Rifkind: Since June 1987 one grade 1 and eight grade 3 officers in my Department have attended—in Edinburgh—tutorials on information technology.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of hearing therapists employed in Scotland for each of the list five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No hearing therapists have been employed in Scotland to date.

Prisoners (Observation)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the terms of reference of the review into procedures relating to prisoners requiring individual observation as recommended by the sheriff following a fatal accident inquiry in October 1987; when the review will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The sheriff's determination was received in February 1988. No terms of reference as such have been promulgated, but changes in the methods of recording observation requirements have been introduced. Other issues which the sheriff's determination highlighted are still being considered. I shall write to the hon. Member when this has been concluded.

Scottish Film Council

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the representations he has received on his consultative paper on the future constitution of the Scottish Film Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am in touch with the Scottish Film Council about its constitution but not on the basis of a consultative paper. I hope to publish a policy review of the council shortly.

Hospital Building

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the location and cost of each major hospital building project completed since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows.

Farmers (Statistics)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify the number of farmers engaged in (a) lamb, (b) beef and (c) cereal production in Scotland during each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of separate agricultural units in Scotland engaged in lamb, beef and cereal production, as recorded at the June agricultural census each year, is set out in the table.

	Lamb	Beef	Cereals
1979	14,706	20,817	19,267
1980	14,846	20,461	19,057

[1] Reduced.
[2] From the June 1987 census onwards coverage was reduced by 6,000 very small scale holdings. The second set of June 1986 figures provides the bridging comparison.

School Leavers

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of summer school leavers in each region in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The most recent available information relates to session 1986-87 and is given in the table.

Region/Islands area	Number of summer term leavers 1987
Borders	1,200
Central	3,400
Dumfries and Galloway	1,710
Fife	4,130
Grampian	5,690

Hunterston A Power Station

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update to 31 March the information on thermal energy generated and spent fuel discharged by the Hunterston A station given in the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 23 July 1987, Official Report, column 368.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that during the financial year 1987-88 the thermal output of Hunterston A was 8,865,350·4 MWh (thermal) and 72·69 tonnes of fuel were discharged.

Acute Hospital Beds

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average daily occupancy of acute hospital beds in Scotland, by area and age groups (a) 0 to four years, (b) five to 14 years, (c) 15 to 44 years, (d) 45 to 64 years, (e) 65 to 74 years and, (f) 75-plus years for each year since 1974 to the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The average daily occupancy of beds in acute hospital specialties in Scotland is not available by age of patients.

Hospital In-patients

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of hospital in-patients in each area authority for each year since 1974 until the last year for which the figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for each health board in Scotland is given in the table.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of psychiatric hospitals in each area, for each year since 1974 to April 1988, and the number of beds in each hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 13 July at column 209 for the information requested for the year ending 30 September 1987, the latest year for which the information is available. Information for earlier years can be obtained from the annual volumes of "Scottish Hospital Costs".

Scottish Development Department

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons are currently employed in the reporters branch of the Scottish Development Department; and if he will give the comparable figure for the last 10 years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 19 July 1988]: The Scottish Office inquiry reporters unit currently has a staff of 27, comprising 12 reporters and 15 support staff. There are no vacancies. In addition, there is a panel of 15 part-time fee-paid reporters who can be called upon to assist in a limited range of casework. ENERGY

Toronto Conference

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many officials from his Department attended the Toronto conference on the changing atmosphere in June.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom delegation to the Toronto conference on the changing atmosphere was led by the chief scientist of the Department of the Environment and included a representative from my Department.

Gas

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the price regulation arrangements in the gas industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since the privatisation of British Gas this is a matter for the Director General of Gas Supply.

Power Stations (Recommissioning)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to make a satement concerning the recommissioning of redundant power stations in England and Wales.

Mr. Parkinson: The recommissioning of power stations in England and Wales is a commercial matter for the operator concerned.

North Sea Installations

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy with what frequency each oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea is required to be inspected by his Department's inspectors.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Department's safety directorate carries out over 200 inspections each year. The frequency of inspection varies depending on the circumstances of the individual installation. But in general our inspectors would visit each installation at least once a year. In addition, the certifying authorities are required to carry out an annual survey of all offshore installations.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the dates of inspection by his Department's inspectors of each oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea since his Department assumed responsibility.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of serious injuries and fatalities for each oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 14 July 1988 at columns 368-69.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the certifying authorities approved by his Department to certify the safety of oil and gas installations in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea; and which of the approved certifying authorities inspected the Piper Alpha platform.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A list of certifying authorities approved by my Department is set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 14 July 1988 at column 367. "Lloyd's Register of Shipping" is the certifying authority for Piper Alpha.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the annual fee paid to the certifying authorities by each operator in respect of each oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea in respect of safety inspections.

Mr. Peter Morrison: All fees chargeable by certifying authorities are based on a formula set out in schedule 3 to the Offshore Installations [Construction and Survey] Regulations 1974: SI 1974/289.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what notification is required by his Department of a commercial relationship existing between companies operating oil and gas installations in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea and a certifying authority;

(2) if he will list those cases where his Department has been notified of a commercial relationship existing between a company operating an oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea and a certifying authority.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The terms and conditions of the appointment of certifying authorities prohibit them and any other organisation or company in which they have any representation or interest, financial or otherwise, from entering into a commercial relationship with companies operating oil and gas installations they survey.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many inspectors are directly employed by each of the certifying authorities approved by his Department for the purpose of certifying oil and gas installations in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The certifying authorities employ surveyors of many disciplines and they estimate that, in aggregate, 250 man years annually are devoted to offshore installations.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the qualifications required of inspectors employed by the certifying authorities approved by his Department for the purpose of certifying oil and gas installations in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The certifying authorities are required to appoint competent surveyors whose suitability is judged by the authorities themselves and is measured by academic attainment and technical experience. The authorities are required to maintain a list of appointees.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of oil and gas installations in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea for which each inspector employed by a certifying authority is responsible.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The allocation of duties for surveyors is a matter for the certifying authorities.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) with what frequency each oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea is inspected by a certifying authority approved by his Department;

(2) if he will list the dates of inspection by the appropriate certifying authority of each oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea since his Department assumed responsibility.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Every offshore installation must be surveyed by a certifying authority at least annually. A list of all the dates of inspection of every oil and gas installation on the UKCS can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on what dates since coming into operation the Piper Alpha platform has been inspected by his Department's inspectors; and what was the nature, form and duration of each inspection.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the reports of each of his Department's inspections of the Piper Alpha platform.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall make available to Lord Cullen any document which he needs to complete his inquiry. The Government intend that the public inquiry will be as full and far-reaching as necessary.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the annual fee paid by operators in respect of his Department's inspection of each oil and gas installation in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Department does not impose a fee for inspections of offshore installations.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what investigations his Department or its agents carried out into an incident on the Piper Alpha platform in 1984; what conclusions the investigation reached; what recommendations the investigators made; whether these recommendations were implemented; and if he will publish the report of the investigation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have already undertaken to make a copy of the 1984 report on the Piper Alpha platform available to the public inquiry together with any other information which is relevant.

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the construction of the Mersey barrage.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I recently announced an extended second phase of the Mersey barrage feasibility studies costing £1·3 million, jointly funded with the Mersey Barrage Company. The studies will further examine engineering, economic and environmental aspects and are expected to last about two years. The timing of the studies will allow the Mersey Barrage Company to negotiate with the electricity companies which result from our privatisation proposals, and thus to form its views on the commercial prospects of the barrage.

Berkeley Power Station

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on (a) the eventual total cost and (b) the annual cost for each of the next 10 years of the decommissioning of Berkeley Magnox nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB estimates the eventual total cost of decommissioning Berkeley power station at about £300 million. The board expects that a total of about £80 million will be spent during stages 1 and 2 of the decommissioning process which are planned to occur in the first 10-15 years after shutdown. Both estimates are at March 1988 prices.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effect on (a) the book value and (b) the market value of the major electricity generating successor company of the decommissioning of Berkeley Magnox nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB has already made substantial provision in its accounts for the decommissioning of the Berkeley power station. As a result of the decision to close the station, the book value of the CEGB will have to be reduced by the residual value of the Berkeley station together with the remaining decommissioning provisions originally due to be made between now and the end of the life of the station. The market value of the successors to the CEGB will be determined by many factors, including market conditions at the time of the sale.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any public funds (a) have been or (b) will be committed to the Central Electricity Generating Board in connection with the decommissioning of Berkeley Magnox nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: During the operating lifetime of nuclear stations, the CEGB make provisions in the board's accounts with the aim of accumulating sufficient funds to meet the total estimated cost of decommissioning. The board's annual accounts explain the accounting policies adopted.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effects on the balance between nuclear and non-nuclear capacity in the electricity generating industry when privatised of the decommissioning of Berkeley Magnox nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Berkeley represents less than 0·5 per cent. of the CEGB's total capacity and its closure is not therefore significant.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to ensure that section 2*(c)* of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946 is being implemented in regard to opencast operations at licensed sites where the volume of coal extracted greatly exceeds 25,000 tons.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 18 February at column 686.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the long-term study into the effects upon health of opencast mining operations to commence.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No such study is being undertaken by the Department of Energy. Responsibility for the health and safety of opencast mining operations lies with the Health and Safety Commission and Executive.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to assist British Coal in improving the security of redundant opencast coal mining sites.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Security of redundant opencast coal sites is the responsibility of the owners of the site.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will update to 31 March the information on the allocation of plutonium produced in the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board Magnox reactors given in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 24 July 1987, Official Report, columns 517-18;

(2) if he will update to 31 March the information on thermal energy generated and spent fuel discharged by each of the Central Electricity Generating Board Magnox reactors given in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 24 July 1987, Official Report, columns 517-18.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government intend to publish figures for 1987-88 on the plutonium produced at Britain's power stations, reprocessing activities at Sellafield and civil plutonium stocks. This information should be available in September and will include thermal energy generated, spent fuel discharged and the allocation of plutonium. The information will be placed in the Library of the House and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to be sent a copy.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his oral reply to hon. Members on 14 June, Official Report, column 146, if the special unit dealing with transitional protection in respect of housing benefits is now fully operational.

Mr. Portillo: Yes.

Powdered Baby Milk

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the brand of powdered baby milk which was withdrawn from the market as a result of salmonella infection has now been returned to supermarket shelves; and if he will make a statement;

(2) which powdered baby foods were withdrawn from the market earlier this month; where they were manufactured; and what was the source of contamination.

Mrs. Currie: On 1 July 1988 Milupa UK recalled two dried baby milks, Milumil and aptamil, and three infant breakfast cereals, '7 cereal', 'oat breakfast with apple', and 'mixed fruit with cereal' all produced at their factory in Colmar, France, following a finding of salmonella in one sample of Milumil produced in January 1988. The source of the infection is still not known despite extensive investigations by the company and the French authorities. Intensive cleaning was carried out by the company at the beginning of May 1988, and it has been agreed that withdrawn products may be replaced by those manufactured after this date. Products made in the Milupa factory in West Germany are not affected, and have remained on retail sale.

Staff Training

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 1 July, Official Report, column 394, how many hours training individual staff of his Department received showing, in particular, how many hours were received by office managers, social fund officers, counter staff and other categories.

Mr. Portillo: The number of hours social fund training received by DHSS local office staff (using seven hours as a working day where training took place other than in a training centre) were as follows:

	Hours
Office Managers	28
Social Fund Officer (Higher Executive Officer)	115
Social Fund Officer (Local Officer Grade I)	108
Social Fund Local Officer Grade II	13½
Social Fund Aministrative Assistant	10
Non Social Fund Staff	3

Family Credit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average length of time that families in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency, who were in receipt of family income supplement, had to wait between application and granting of family credit during the period of transition.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average length of time that families in the Crewe and Nantwich constituency, who were in receipt of family credit, had to wait between application and granting of benefit during the period of change over.

Mr. Portillo: I assume the hon. Members are referring to families who were receiving family income supplement up to April 1988. Such families were reassessed for family credit from 11 April 1988, and an award issued, without the need for a further claim. Around 90 per cent. of cases were dealt with before 11 April, and the remainder were mainly cases where the claim for family income supplement was made shortly before 11 April. Information is not available in respect of families from particular local areas.

Hospital Patients (Discharge)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the efficiency of system of notification between hospitals and the local social services department on the discharge of patients from hospital.

Mrs. Currie: We believe the system normally works well; however, a few cases have given cause for concern. A draft circular has therefore been prepared and issued for comment. It updates existing advice and reminds health authorities of the need to establish and thereafter monitor clear procedures to be followed when patients are discharged from hospital, including notification of social services departments. Comments already received on the draft circular indicate that many authorities already have effective systems for notifying local social services departments about patients being discharged from hospitals. The circular is being revised in the light of comments received, and will be issued in the autumn.

Allowances

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to improve the rate at which claims for invalid care allowance and attendance allowance are processed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The necessary processes involved in considering an attendance allowance claim are such that we do not envisage any significant short-term improvements in the clearance times reported in my answer to my hon. Friend on 5 July at columns 512-13. But we are seeking substantial short-term improvements in invalid care allowance clearance times. For both benefits we will be studying whether increased use of computer technology will lead to long-term improvements in processing times.

Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of National Health Service (a) male doctors and (b) female doctors who are also carrying out private practice work; and what percentage this represents of the total in each case (i) for England and Wales and (ii) for the Doncaster area health authority.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors are currently employed within the National Health Service; how many of these were trained overseas; and what levels of written and spoken English, and other skills, are required for the latter prior to appointment.

Mr. Newton: The number of doctors employed in the hospital and community health services in England at 30 September 1986 was 52,058. Information is not readily available centrally on their countries of qualification; but 13,721 were born overseas. The majority of overseas doctors appointed in the NHS come here for postgraduate training. Overseas doctors must satisfy the General Medical Council that they have the linguistic and professional skills to practise in the NHS.

AIDS

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to improve the supply of National Health Service factor VIII needed for the treatment of haemophiliacs.

Mrs. Currie: Factor VIII for the treatment of haemophilia patients in England and Wales is made for the National Health Service by the blood products laboratory (BPL) at Elstree. A new BPL costing £60 million was opened in April 1987. After an extensive commissioning programme BPL is issuing factor VIII at record levels, and production is planned to rise steadily to meet the needs of haemophiliacs.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will identify the average per capita cost to (a) the hospital and community health services, (b) the family practitioner service and (c) personal social services of (i) 0-20 year olds, (ii) 20-64 year olds, (iii) 64-75 year olds and (iv) 75 year olds and above.

Mr. Newton: Estimates of gross current expenditure per head of population on (a) the hospital and community health services, (b) the family practitioner service and (c) personal social services for 1985-86 are shown in the table. I regret that the age breakdown which is routinely available does not exactly match that requested.

Estimated gross current expenditure per head—England 1985-86

	0-15	16-64	65-74	75+
Hospital and community health services	120	105	390	970
Family practitioner service	70	65	100	150
Personal social services	80	20	80	355

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of voluntary, private and local authority residents care homes for elderly people in England and Wales; and, in each case, what is the total number of places available.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information, as at 31 March 1986, on the numbers of voluntary, private and local authority homes in England for elderly people and the total numbers of places available are contained in the Department's publication RA/86/2—"Residential Accommodation for Elderly and for Younger Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes". Copies are available in the Library.

Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Refugees

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department is restricting the allowances to refugees who have sought sanctuary in the United Kingdom to 90 per cent. of income support; if he will give the numbers of refugees who have submitted claims to the Department of Health and Social Security and have received payments at only 90 per cent. of income support since April; if he has plans to review this policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Income support, like its predecessor, supplementary benefit, is not payable under the normal rules to people who are admitted temporarily to the United Kingdom. Special provisions enable urgent cases payments to be made to asylum-seekers admitted temporarily to the United Kingdom whilst their applications for refugee status are considered. Once accepted as qualifying for refugee status under the United Nations convention, normal benefit is payable.

Under income support, urgent cases payments are made at 90 per cent. of the normal rate, although allowances for children and housing costs are met in full. These rules apply not just to asylum-seekers but to other groups of people in defined circumstances. The reason for the abatement is that there would be no point in having rules which exclude people from benefit in certain situations if they could obtain full benefit by virtue of the urgent cases rules.

All instances in which urgent cases payments are made to people from abroad are notified by local social security offices to the office of the chief adjudication officer (OCAO). In the period 6 April-30 June 1988 OCAO received information about 613 new cases.

We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Private Beds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what proportion of bills for the use of private beds or private facilities in the National Health Service have remained unpaid for each year since 1979, (costings);

(2) what was the figure in (a) cash terms and (b) as a percentage of the total, of unpaid bills tendered by health authorities in respect of private beds and the private use of National Health Service facilities, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: Information derivable from the summarised accounts of health authorities in England for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87 (the latest available) is shown in the table. I regret that comparable information for earlier years is not held centrally.

Amounts Written-Off for bad debts and claims abandoned—Private Patients	£641,001	£810,219
As a Proportion of Total Gross Income from Private Patients' Percentage	1·0	1·4

Source:
Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities together with those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals.

Notes:
1. The figures relate to services provided for private in-patients and private out-patients under sections 65 and 66 of the NHS Act 1977 respectively. Separate write-off figures for income due under section 58 (which arises mainly from services provided to private health care establishments) are not collected centrally.
2. Sums written-off in each financial year include amounts due from earlier years which are not separately identifiable. The totals written-off in each year are offset against the relevant income headings by health authorities to produce the next income figures recorded in their annual accounts.

Postgraduate Hospitals

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the omission of references to postgraduate teaching hospitals from the cardinal principles set out by Bloomsbury health authority which it will not breach without further reference to the authority in respect of savings measures, he will instruct the authority to adopt the principle that the role of the postgraduate hospitals and institutes should not be fundamentally undermined and that they should continue to be able to sustain postgraduate teaching and research.

Mr. Newton: I understand that Bloomsbury health authority intends that the teaching and research role of the postgraduate hospitals should be preserved.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up an inquiry into the decline or development that has occurred with the postgraduate hospitals, with particular regard to the financial effect on the hospital of being independent as against being within a district health authority.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the continued incorporation of postgraduate hospitals in health authorities with severe financial problems.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to change the existing arrangements under which hospitals with postgraduate teaching facilities are managed by particular health authorities.

Consultants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards National Health Service consultants holding other than full-time contracts.

Mr. Newton: Current guidance on the appointment of consultants states that posts may be established as either whole-time (with a maximum part-time option) or part-time, and that whole-time posts should be advertised in such a way that doctors able to work only part time for personal reasons can be considered for appointment.

Private

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of beds available in private hospitals and clinics for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table.

Registered beds in private institutions[2] as at 31 December, England

Year	All institutions	Beds in institutions with operating theatres
1982	34,786	7,663
1983	38,054	8,105
1984	42,898	8,633
1985	50,985	8,634
1986[1]	62,112	8,991

[1] Latest available.
[2] Private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the percentage of private hospital beds which were in the ownership of American companies, for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: We do not collect this information centrally. However, I understand that an Independent Hospitals Association survey of acute hospitals (UK 1988) showed that in 1979 there were 366 beds (5 per cent.) in hospitals owned by American companies and by July 1988 this had increased to 2,320 beds (22 per cent.) We welcome this growing response to public demand.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of private residential care and nursing homes employed staff who are suitably qualified, for each year for which figures are available since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. It is a statutory requirement that all nursing homes provide adequate professional, technical, ancillary and other staff. Similarly, residential care homes must employ sufficient suitably qualified and competent staff for the well being of residents. Available information is given in the table.

Registered Private Institutions [2] as at 31 December, England

Year	All Institutions	Qualified Nursing Staff W.T.E.
1982	1,214	12,208
1983	1,316	13,754
1984	1,491	15,446
1985	1,833	18,354
[1]1986 (latest available)	2,266	21,683

[1] Comparable statistics were not collected prior to 1982.
[2] Private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield, Official Report, column 58, 11 July, he will state why his Department does not collect information about the percentage of residents in private residential care and private nursing homes who are in receipt of income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The cost of collecting the information in the form requested would be disproportionately large.

Myringotomy and Tympanostomy

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many myringotomy and tympanostomy operations have been carried out in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: Estimated numbers for the last five years for which data are held centrally is given in the table:

Estimated number of myringotomy/tympanostomy operations performed in NHS hospitals, England, 1981 to 1985

Year	In-patients	Day cases	Total
1985	35,670	22,740	58,410
1984	35,190	19,210	54,400
1983	34,350	16,920	51,270
1982	29,520	12,970	42,490
1981	30,420	13,570	43,990

Hearing Aid Centres

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department last compiled a list of hearing aid centres; when he next intends to compile such a list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Department last compiled a list of hearing aid centres in 1985. The procurement and distribution of National Health Service hearing aids is now administered by Mersey regional health authority which keeps its own list of centres.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many hearing therapists have been employed by the National Health Service in each of the last five years;

(2) how many hearing therapists are currently employed by the National Health Service and, for the latest period for which details are available, by region.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Medical Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are to be taken in order to clear the backlog of medical appeals tribunals in the north-west region.

Mr. Portillo: The administration of medical appeal tribunals is the responsibility of the president of social security and medical appeal tribunals, his honour Judge Byrt, QC.

I am advised by the president that delays in individual medical appeal tribunal cases are attributable to a variety of causes, some of which are beyond his organisation's control. The president is confident that a number of measures now in hand, including the recruitment of additional medical appeal tribunal chairmen and members, an increase in the number of hearings held and the deployment of additional administrative resources, will significantly reduce delays in both the north-western region and elsewhere.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the quality of data he receives from local authority social services departments concerning the services they provide for people with disabilities.

Mr. Scott: Central data on certain services for people with disabilities are collected annually by means of statistical returns issued to each of the local authority social services departments in England. The returns are subject to validation procedures to check that the overall quality of data is within acceptable limits. The coverage of the statistical returns is reviewed regularly in consultation with representatives of the local authorities.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people currently in receipt of mobility allowance, other than those with reserved rights under the former vehicle scheme, are due to reach their 75th birthday before the end of 1988.

Mr. Scott: None of the current recipients of the allowance, apart from those who have transferred from the former invalid vehicle scheme, is due to reach age 75 before 29 November 1989.

Benefits (Scotland)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of supplementary benefit and income support claims received in the last six weeks period for which records are available in his Department's local offices in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) the Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Portillo: Information on supplementary benefit and income support claims is not available for six-week periods. The numbers of supplementary benefit and income support claims received for the period 11 April to 31 May 1988 are as follows:

	Supplementary Benefit	Income Support
Greenock Local Office	287	1,017
Port Glasgow Local Office	190	499
Strathclyde Region[1]	12,439	27,332
Scotland	17,610	55,248

Source: Internal Regional Management statistical returns. (These figures are provisional and subject to amendment).

[1] The administrative region of Strathclyde encompasses 31 Local Offices of the Department, excluding National Insurance Offices, and the boundaries are not conterminous.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the staffing allocations for 1988-89, as determined by the agreed complementing system for his Department's local offices in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) the Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland as a whole; and what were the comparable staffing levels in (i) 1986-87 and (ii) 1987-88.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

	1988-1989	1987-88	1986-87
Greenock ILO	150	175	172
Port Glasgow ILO	74	81	79
Strathclyde	4,128	4,643	4,431
Scotland	7,449	8,299	7,896

Abbreviation--ILO = Integrated Local Office.

The figures given exclude cleaners.

The reduction in complement for 1988-1989 results largely from the replacement of supplementary benefit by income support and the fall in numbers of unemployed claimants.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of (a) men and (b) women receiving (i) invalidity benefit and (ii) severe disablement allowance in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow; (b) the Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table which shows the estimated numbers of recipients of those benefits in Scotland as at 4 April 1987, the latest date for which the information is held:

Benefit	Men	Women
Invalidity benefit	96,100	39,100
Severe Disablement allowance	12,800	18,900

Separate local office records are not kept for these benefits.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families are in receipt of family credit in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency; and how many families in Greenock and Port Glasgow were in receipt of family income supplement in each of the past three years.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not available. Family income supplement claims were dealt with centrally and no information was maintained about claims from particular local areas. Family credit is also being dealt with centrally, and information is available only on a national basis.

Priority Issues

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the priority issues which he has identified to district health authorities in the last two years.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are guided by the priorities set out in the planning guidelines circulars issued by the Department. Copies of the relevant circulars, HC(86)2 and HC(87)7, are in the Library.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he plans to take against health authorities intending to use some of the additional money earmarked for the cost of nurses' pay awards for other areas of expenditure.

Mr. Newton: We have no reason to believe that health authorities intend to use the additional funds we have allocated following the review body awards other than to meet pay costs.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of psychiatric hospitals in each region for each year from 1974 to April 1988 and the number of beds in each hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the number of National Health Service mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units by each health authority in England for each year between 1974 and 1986, the latest year for which information is available. The table shows the average daily number of available beds by region, as it would incur disproportionate cost to provide from central information the number of beds in each hospital.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report all national and local offices of his Department identifying whether they are freehold or leasehold, how long each lease has to run and the cost of each lease.

Mr. Portillo: The Property Services Agency of the Department of the Environment has responsibility for acquiring property on behalf of the Department of Health and Social Security and acts as lessee for all buildings occupied. The information could be obtained but only at disproportionate cost.

Leukaemia Clusters

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the number and location of the leukaemia clusters being investigated at present;

(2) what plans his Department has to investigate all leukaemia clusters found throughout the United Kingdom with a view to establishing their cause.

Mrs. Currie: Leukaemia, like other rare diseases, tends to cluster as a matter of statistical chance, and investigation will not necessarily lead to the detection of local environmental causes. Nevertheless, the Government are funding developments in the statistics to facilitate the systematic detection and investigation of clusters. In particular, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 30 March 1988 at columns 550-51. The small area health statistics unit is funded by Government and its work is guided by a steering committee on which sit independent experts and officials.

Research into the epidemiology of leukaemia is undertaken by a number of cancer registries and research organisations funded both by Government and independently, and arrangements have been agreed between them to co-ordinate the development of methods and their investigations.

Meanwhile, the Department is involved with investigations into leukaemia clusters around Sellafield in Cumbria and Aldermaston and Burghfield in Berkshire. I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and for Wales that their Departments are involved with a number of investigations.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 8 June 1988 at columns 600-1 about the report of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment on the incidence of leukaemia around Dounreay. Also, an independent committee in Northern Ireland is examining the patterns of disease with a possible association with radiation. This will include a search for possible leukaemia clusters. In Wales, an investigation into the incidence of leukaemia on the north Wales coast is in progress.

Social Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that women who take refuge from violence inflicted by a spouse or partner, who is in receipt of income support, remain eligible for social fund loans or grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund crisis or budgeting loans or community care grants may be available to enable people to move to new accommodation following a breakdown in a relationship. Loans and grants may also be available for clothing where the applicant is unable to recover clothing from the former home because of the risk of violence or where clothing has been damaged as a result of the breakdown in the relationship. Community care grants may be awarded only to people receiving income support, and budgeting loans to people who themselves or whose partners have been in receipt of income support for 26 weeks; but crisis loans may be awarded to people without resources whether on income support or not.

Community Care

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to enable those of Vietnamese origin granted refuge in the United Kingdom to be eligible to claim community care grants for setting up home and obtaining their basic needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Community care grants to set up home may be available to refugees receiving income support if they are being resettled in the community from a hostel or other form of accommodation for refugees by an organisation as part of a planned programme of resettlement.

London Ambulance Service

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to take steps to improve the response of the London ambulance service to emergency calls.

Mrs. Currie: The responsibility for response times lies with the South West Thames regional health authority which is responsible, on behalf of the four Thames regions, for the management of the London ambulance service (LAS). I understand, however, that the LAS is in the process of negotiating revised accident and emergency rotas with the staff side of the LAS. When these are implemented they will enable the LAS to provide more relief staff and thus improve its manning levels.

Ms. Harman To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will conduct an inquiry into the response to an emergency call to the London ambulance service at 1 am on Saturday 25 June from Donnington road, Worcester Park.

Mrs. Currie: No. I understand my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary (Lords) will receive a report from the London ambulance service which is carrying out an inquiry into the case.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about staffing levels in the London ambulance service.

Mrs. Currie: The staffing levels for ambulance personnel are at present:

	In post
Leading Ambulance Personnel	60·0
Qualified Ambulance Personnel	1,451·0
Ambulance Personnel	685·5

A further 12 full-time and seven part-time staff are at present contracted to become ambulance personnel. I understand that the London ambulance service is continuing to carry out a recruitment programme.

Administration of Benefits

Mrs. Virgina Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to consider the status of the administration of social security benefits in the light of the report, "Improving Management in Government: The Next Steps."

Mr. Moore: I have asked my officials to examine the organisation of the whole of social security operations including computer services and to recommend whether they can with advantage be run as a "Next Steps" agency or agencies.

The "Next Steps" initiative presents important new opportunities to all Government Departments, but particularly for the DHSS. Administration of the social security scheme employs nearly 90,000 people (nearly 90 per cent. of DHSS staff) who work in a network of central, regional and local DHSS offices across the country, authorising, calculating and paying benefits and collecting national insurance contributions. The study I have commissioned will consider how this huge "business" could produce a better service to the public and improved value to the taxpayer by being changed into an executive agency, or agencies, along the lines recommended in the "Next Steps" report.

In the light of the recommendations of officials the Government will be in a position to reach conclusions on the most appropriate way to run social security operations and, if appropriate, the shape and form of an agency or agencies.

District Nursing Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for each district health authority in England, the number of whole-time equivalent health visitors employed per head of the population aged (a) up to five years and (b) 65 years and over;

(2) if he will list, for every health authority in England (a) the number of whole-time equivalent district nurses employed in 1979-80, (b) the number of whole-time equivalent district nurses employed in 1986-87 and (c) the number of district nurses employed per 1,000 of the population aged 65 years and over;

(3) if he will indicate, for each district health authority in England, the number of whole-time equivalent health visitors employed in (a) 1979-80 and (b) 1986-87.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 14 July 1988]: I regret that it is not possible to provide all the information requested.

The number of health visitors and the total qualified district nursing staff employed in each region at September 1979 and September 1986 is shown in the table. Comparable figures by district health authority for 1979 and 1986 are not available because of the 1982 NHS reorganisation. As regards ratios of staff to population it is not meaningful to provide such information for specific age groups as the staff provide care to all ages.

Day Care Places

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many day care places for the elderly mentally infirm are currently available in the National Health Service in each regional health authority; and if he will express the figure per head of the population aged 75 years and over for each region.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 14 July 1988]: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses entered into mental handicap nurse training for each of the past five years in each region in England.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 14 July 1988]: Information supplied by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for the years ended 31 March 1985, 1986 and 1987 is shown in the table. Information is not available prior to 1985.

The figures for 1986-87 relate to all entrants to training, including those undertaking training for a second qualification. Those for 1984-85 and 1985-86 related just to those entering training for their first basic nurse qualification. Therefore they are not comparable.

National Insurance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he issues to local offices on the grounds on which they may waive class 1 national insurance contributions unpaid by employers; and when they were last revised.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 14 July 1988]: Authority for granting waivers of unlimited amount has been delegated to local office management since April 1983. Before then this authority rested with regional finance officers.

The relevant guidance to local offices suggests that in deciding whether a waiver should be granted, they should take account of such factors as whether there was genuine and reasonable doubt about the class of contribution payable, whether this or another Government Department may have misdirected the employer on national insurance contribution liability, and the size of the arrears. In combination with one or more of those factors, local offices may take into account the assets of the employer.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what grounds the local Department of Health and Social Security office decided on 3 April 1985 to waive the class 1 national insurance contributions which New College school, Cardiff had omitted to pay in respect of the staff it employed from 6 April 1980 to 5 April 1984.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 14 July 1988]: The waiver was given on the grounds that there was genuine and reasonable doubt about the class of national insurance contribution payable. The Department considered that the school managers had acted in good faith in not paying class 1 contributions. In these circumstances, it was decided not to jeopardise the financial stability of the school and thereby the jobs of its employees by demanding arrears of contributions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he expects to recover any or all of the sum of £16,575, being class 1 national insurance contributions unpaid by New College school, Cardiff, in respect of the staff it employed between 6 April 1980 and 5 April 1984.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 14 July 1988]: No. An absolute waiver was given.

Income

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the index of average income for 1981 and 1983 in tables A1,2,3; C1,2,3; D1, 2, 3 and F1,2,3 of "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis."

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The information requested is set out in the table.

As explained in the report of the technical review of the low-income statistics, and in the technical annex to the households below average income statistics, to enable meaningful comparisons, the actual cash incomes received by households are adjusted to reflect varying household size and composition and expressed in terms of individuals in households. National average income per individual, calculated after these adjustments, is shown in the table defined as 100. Incomes at other levels are expressed as an index of average income. The figures therefore provide a basis for comparisons of relative cash incomes between individual groups and individual years but do not provide an indication of the actual cash incomes of the households concerned.

Notes: Household income is defined after the payment of any income tax and national insurance and the receipt of any social security benefits. Individuals within households have been ranked according to their household incomes. Table numbers refer to "Households Below Average Income 1981-85". This publication, copies of which are in the Library, provides further details on the methods and assumptions used in these analyses.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Development Corporations

12. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of grant assistance has so far been awarded to the seven urban development corporations created in December 1987.

Mr. Ridley: Grant-in-aid for all English urban development corporations in the financial year 1988-89 is £203 million. Of this, £15 million has been set aside for UDCs to be established during the financial year.

41. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has decided who will become the chairmen of the seven urban development corporations created in December 1987.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has appointed Dr. James Grigor as chairman of the Central Manchester development corporation, Mr. Peter Hartley as chairman of the Leeds development corporation, Mr. Hugh Sykes as chairman of the Sheffield development corporation and Mr. Christopher Thomas as chairman-designate of the proposed Bristol development corporation.

45. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with regard to the seven urban development corporations created in December 1987.

Mr. Trippier: Good progress is being made by all the urban development corporations (UDCs). Three new UDCs and an extension to the Black Country DC were announced last December, a further UDC and an extension to Merseyside DC were announced in March. I am pleased to say that three of the four new UDCs (Central Manchester, Sheffield and Leeds DC) and the extension to the Black Country DC were established on 30 June. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State laid an order to designate the Merseyside DC extension on 12 July. Bristol city council has unfortunately petitioned against the order to establish a Bristol DC, resulting in considerable cost and delay.

Council Properties (Incentive Allowance Schemes)

15. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities operate incentive allowance schemes for council tenants to move out of their tenancies in order for the property to be sold to private developers.

Mrs. Roe: I am not aware of any such schemes.

Sports Council

16. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what remuneration is paid to senior members of the Sports Council; and what changes in their duties he expects to follow from the reduction in the membership of the council.

Mr. Moynihan: The chairman is paid £15,392 per annum and the vice-chairmen £11,595 per annum and £9,276 per annum respectively. The duties of the paid appointments to the council remain unchanged but it is for the council to determine how it organises the structure and management of its business in the light of the reduction in the membership of the council.

54. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Sports Council; and if he will raise with him his policy on how the council is to organise its structure and its business with a reduced membership.

Mr. Moynihan: I will be meeting the chairman of the Sports Council on 28 July to discuss the council's draft corporate plan for 1989-90. It is for the council to determine how it organises the structure and management of the business in the light of the reduction in the membership of the council.

84. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial savings are envisaged from his proposed changes in the Sports Council structure.

Mr. Moynihan: I announced on 1 July my proposal to reduce the membership of the Sports Council to less than half its present size. This change will make the council more efficient and effective, but it will not affect the level of the Sports Council's grant-in-aid.

Water Metering

17. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about progress in water metering experiments.

Mr. Moynihan: So far the Department has received formal proposals for six metering trial schemes. The first of these, covering a small scale trial in Chandlers Ford in Hampshire was approved by my right hon. Friend last week. The other five schemes are under detailed consideration. I expect to receive proposals for other metering trials from water undertakers over the next few months.

London Docklands Development Corporation

19. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been attracted to the London Docklands development corporation since 1981; and how many jobs were lost in the previous four years.

Mr. Trippier: There are an estimated 36,000 jobs in the LDDC area, compared to 27,000 in 1981 when the corporation was created. About 20,000 are new jobs created or jobs attracted to the area since 1981. Some 10,000 jobs were lost between 1978 and 1981.

Trafford Park UDC

20. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Government funding has so far been invested in the Trafford Park urban development corporation; and what progress the Trafford Park urban development corporation has so far made.

89. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how far forward the Trafford Park urban development corporation is with its plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Trafford Park development corporation has drawn down £13·5 million of grant-in-aid since its inception in February 1987, £10·45 million in the financial year 1987-88, the remainder in the present financial year.

The corporation has been engaged in a programme of strategic land acquisition and environmental improvement projects. It has brought forward proposals for the redevelopment of Trafford Park village as a business centre; the upgrading of the Haddfield street industrial area; and for waterside developments in the Wharfside area.

The corporation has been taking initiatives in many other areas and through its marketing strategy has generated a substantial amount of private sector interest.

Housing Associations

21. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of housing associations; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans for such a meeting, but there are frequent contracts with individual housing associations and representatives of the movement, at both ministerial and official level, on matters of common interest.

Rural Voluntary Action

22. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take, in the light of the National Council of Voluntary Organisations' 10-point plan regarding rural voluntary action, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We attach great importance to the role of voluntary organisations in rural areas. We shall continue to assist them in appropriate ways, particularly through the Rural Development Commission.

Redundant Agricultural Buildings

23. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue further guidelines to planning authorities to ensure that applications for change of use of redundant agricultural buildings receive speedy and positive attention.

Mrs. Roe: Our planning policy guidance notes on green belts and rural enterprise and development, issued in January, reiterated our encouragement to planning authorities to treat positively applications for the reuse of redundant agricultural buildings. We continue to urge authorities to process all planning applications as quickly as possible.

Rating Reform

24. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of people to be exempted from paying the community charge.

Mr. Howard: We estimate that about half a million people will be exempt from paying the personal community charge.

52. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest assessment of the effect of the proposed national non-domestic rate on the northern region.

Mr. Howard: Rate poundages in the northern region are presently between 10 and 28 per cent. more than this year's national average of 239·5p. A uniform non-domestic rate poundage at that level would have reduced rate bills in the region by £110 million on current rateable values. The national non-domestic rate will be introduced simultaneously with a revaluation. The outcome of that is not yet known, but it is expected that businesses in the northern region will benefit further, though the impact will vary for different types of property. With a national non-domestic rate, rate poundage will rise no faster than the rate of inflation, unlike this year when increases in Durham ranged from 14 to 20 per cent. Lower and more stable rate poundages will encourage investment and allow businesses to plan sensibly.

100. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the element of the estimated community charges in Derbyshire and Staffordshire for 1988-89 attributable to county precepts.

Mr. Howard: In the new local government finance system, authorities will be accountable for all their expenditure requirements, not just the amount remaining to be found after the attribution of Government grant. The community charge figures published on 23 June for local authority areas in Derbyshire and Staffordshire included expenditure of £643 and £595 per adult for those councils, respectively. Those expenditure levels are £55 and £3 per adult, respectively, greater than the needs assessments for those councils and add those amounts to the community charges there.

Planning Control

25. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific planning control items will be accorded priority for inclusion in his Department's proposed new planning and development legislation.

Mr. Ridley: Although I have a number of items in mind, I cannot anticipate the content of a later Session's legislative programme.

Homelessness

26. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning the use of Government-owned empty properties for homeless families.

Mrs. Roe: Each Department is responsible for bringing its empty dwellings back into use or, where they are no longer needed for operational reasons, disposing of them as quickly as possible. Where dwellings likely to be required in future are temporarily empty, Departments are encouraged to let them to local authorities or housing associations, which can make them available to homeless families.

34. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of homeless households accepted by local authorities in each year from 1985 whose homelessness resulted from mortgage arrears.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 27 June at column 146.

72. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for the number of homeless families accepted by local authorities in the current year.

95. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of homeless people in England.

Mrs. Roe: The available information is on the households accepted as homeless by English local authorities and the latest estimate appears in table 1 of "Local Authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter of 1988. Supplementary Tables", which is available in the Library.

83. Miss Lestor To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide further resources to tackle homelessness.

Mrs. Roe: We have already done so—£74 million additional resources have recently been provided, in particular to help get empty property into use for the homeless. In addition, estate action funding is available for particular schemes. Homelessness pressures will be taken into account in local authorities' HIP allocations for 1989-90, for which bids have just been invited.

96. Mr Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the estimated total annual cost for homeless families placed in bed and breakfast by local authorities.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 27 June at column 159.

Sport (Drug Testing)

27. Mr McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) the current annual cost of drug testing in British sport, (b) how many positive results have been reported and (c) what action was taken in respect of them.

Mr. Moynihan: The 1988-89 doping control budget allocations of the four United Kingdom sports councils total £674,000 of which approximately £500,000 will be spent on their testing programmes. Since 1 April, when the implementation of the new drug testing regime began, analysis of initial samples taken from sportsmen and women have produced 12 adverse findings, the majority of which relate to instances where a banned substance such as codeine had been taken in small dose as medication. However, three cases are proceeding to further investigation and governing body decisions on appropriate action will be taken once this process has been completed. Any action they do take will be considered by the independent review panel set to monitor the operation of the drug testing programme and of governing body actions.

London City Airport

28. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning any planning application for test flights or full-scale commercial flights of jet aircraft to or from London City airport.

Mr. Trippier: As set out in my answer of 8 July, planning permission was granted by the London Docklands development corporation on 5 July allowing the London City airport to be used on three days for demonstration flights by British Aerospace 146 aircraft. The corporation has not received planning applications to use the airport for commercial flights by the BAE 146 or other jet aircraft.

Public Bodies (Surplus Land)

29. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will cause an analysis to be made of the disincentives to the release of surplus land by public bodies.

Mr. Trippier: My Department's programme of research in the current financial year includes an examination of the cost-effectiveness of various policy measures for bringing vacant land into use. The examination is expected to cover any factors that hinder this process.

Housebuilders Federation

30. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the Housebuilders Federation to discuss development in the south-east.

Mr. Waldegrave: I last met representatives of the Housebuilders Federation on 12 October 1987 to discuss regional housing issues in the south-east. There have been subsequent meetings between officials.

Local Authority Sports and Leisure Facilities

31. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he received from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on competition in the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: The association responded in detail to the consultation paper which we issued last autumn. A copy of its response has been placed in the Library. I met representatives of the association on 8 March. Among other things, we discussed the Government's proposal to introduce compulsory competition into the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities.

Football Violence

32. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further measures he is considering to combat the effects of violence in or around football stadiums.

Mr. Moynihan: Following my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's meeting on 6 July with the football authorities, the Government announced their intention to bring forward proposals for legislation to give statutory backing to a national membership scheme.

Local Authority Capital Expenditure

33. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce his plans for the reform of local authority capital expenditure.

56. Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a Green Paper on the reform of local authority capital expenditure.

Mr. Howard: The Government's proposals for a new system to regulate local authority capital expenditure and finance in England and Wales were published in a consultation paper on 7 July.

Football League Matches

36. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) how many individual spectators paid to watch Football League matches in England in the 1987-88 season, (b) the average amount of time spectators take to pass into Football League grounds and (c) in how many such grounds in that season serious crowd trouble occurred.

Mr. Moynihan: The information available is as follows:

(a) The total attendances at Football League matches during the 1987-88 season was 18,273,621.

(b) There are no statistics available on the average length of time spectators take to pass into Football League grounds.

(c) There were 19 matches at Football League grounds reported to the Football Association during the 1987-88 season at which incidents of crowd disorder took place which the Football Association considered were sufficiently serious to warrant investigation with the clubs concerned. In addition, the police report that the potential for violence was present at a significant number of matches because of the hostile atmosphere created by the provocative and aggressive behaviour of some sections of the crowd.

Football (Crowd Control)

37. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives from the Football Association and the Football League to discuss crowd control.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 13 July at column 228.

Water Supply (Aluminium)

38. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department proposes to commission any research into the possible link between high aluminium levels in water supplies and senility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has no plans to commission any research into a possible link between high aluminium levels in water supplies and senility. However, as the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) was informed on 20 June, the Medical Research Council, with which we are in close touch and which is the main agency through which the Government support medical research in the United Kingdom, is carrying out research on this subject.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the supply outlets of domestic water in the northern region that are currently being treated with aluminium sulphate, have aluminium concentrations in excess of the European Commission guidelines and are subject to derogations for these and other reasons.

Mr. Moynihan: Information on the water supplies in the northern region which are currently being treated with aluminium sulphate is not held centrally. The only supply which regularly exceeds the European Commission directive standard, is Tunstall, which serves around 60,000 people in the Bishop Auckland area. The Department has applied to the European Commission under article 20 of the directive for a delay in applying the aluminium standard to the Tunstall area until the end of 1988. The improvement programme is on target to meet that date. However, current aluminium concentrations are not considered to be a health risk.

New Construction

39. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest set of quarterly orders for new construction figures; and if he will comment on them.

Mr. Trippier: The latest figures of construction orders for new work in Great Britain by private contractors are given in the table.

	1988 first quarter provisional figures £ million 1980 prices seasonally adjusted	Percentage change from first quarter 1987 per cent.
Public housing	154	−16
Private housing	1,060	+8
Public other new work	1,130	+9
Private industrial	663	+3
Private commercial	1,905	+62
All new work	4,911	+22

These impressive results are largely due to orders placed by private sector clients. Private commercial orders were at a new record level in the first quarter of 1988, and private housing orders were at the highest level for 15 years.

The continuing high level of new orders placed in recent months supports the generally held view that this will be another good year for the construction industry with further growth in output expected.

Stonehenge

40. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from English Heritage about its plans to enhance facilities at Stonehenge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The chairman of English Heritage has kept us regularly in touch with his plans as they have developed. Officials of the Department have been helping English Heritage identify options for providing access to the proposed new visitor centre, in discussion with the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Transport and the county council. English Heritage now needs to reach agreement in principle with MoD and any private landowners affected on the best choice of route.

Capital Expenditure Controls

42. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the local authority associations to discuss the reform of capital expenditure controls.

Mr. Chope: The consultation paper which my right hon. Friend published on 7 July was discussed at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 11 July.

Local Plans

43. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to take to encourage local authorities to comply with the recommendations contained in the draft planning policy guidance note on local plans.

Mr. Waldegrave: I believe that local planning authorities will see the value of preparing statutory local plans for their areas: development control decisions taken in accordance with such plans are generally less susceptible to successful challenge. As the draft guidance note makes clear, where there is an up-to-date local plan, together with properly substantiated reasons for the local authority's decision, my right hon. Friend and his inspectors will be guided by it in dealing with planning appeals.

Water Industry Privatisation

44. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with private water companies about the implications of foreign investment in their companies for the privatisation of the industry.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend met the chairman and other representatives of the Water Companies Association to discuss foreign investment and other topics on 8 June.

Planning Policy (Investment)

46. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of planning policy on the location of investment.

Mr. Waldegrave: While the planning system cannot of itself stimulate investment, the effect of placing necessary restrictions on development in particular areas or locations may be to divert investment elsewhere. The effectiveness of a simplified planning regime in encouraging investment into particular locations was one of the issues considered in the recently published evaluation of the enterprise zone experiment.

Waste Imports

47. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about Government policy in respect of importing foreign waste for disposal in Britain.

Mr. Moynihan: We have received representations recently, principally in respect of proposals to import domestic waste from the United States of America.

85. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received in respect of proposals to import foreign waste for landfill disposal in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received many representations in respect of proposals to import domestic waste from the United States of America for landfill in the United Kingdom.

92. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will announce a statutory code of practice on imported waste transit and disposal.

Mr. Moynihan: The transport, transfer and disposal of imported waste are subject to the same controls that apply to indigenous waste. The Government announced on 29 June a number of measures to strengthen these controls. A code of practice will contain guidance on the steps to be expected of waste producers and holders in transferring waste to another person so as to discharge a new statutory duty of care. Any person importing waste will be subject to the new duty. The code will be published when legislation is before Parliament.

Brick Deliveries

48. Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the level of brick deliveries in the first quarter of the current year.

Mr. Trippier: Brick deliveries in the first quarter of 1988 totalled 1,141 million. Allowing for normal seasonal variations, deliveries in this period were 10 per cent. higher than in the fourth quarter of 1987 and 13 per cent. higher than in the corresponding period a year earlier. These increases reflect the continuing strong growth in building activity in the United Kingdom.

Power Stations

49. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what detailed assessment he has made as to whether sulphur dioxide emissions will be significantly reduced by retrofitting by 1993 three power stations with flue gas desulphurisation equipment.

Mr. Moynihan: Retrofitting one 2,000 MW coal-fired power station with flue gas desulphurisation (FGD) will eliminate about 140,000 tonnes per annum of sulphur dioxide emissions (assuming use of coal of average sulphur content for United Kingdom power stations). The Government do not consider that it would be practicable to complete by 1993 a 6,000 MW FGD programme but the CEGB's programme announced in 1986 envisaged commissioning 1,330 MW capacity by the end of that year.

Planning Permission

50. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to introduce a right of appeal for objectors to decisions by local authorities to grant planning permission.

Mr. Waldegrave: In our response (Cm. 43) to the fifth report from the Environment Committee, Session 1985-86, we endorsed the Committee's view that it would not be appropriate to give to third parties rights to appeal against the grant of planning permission.

Draft Planning Circular

51. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the use of green field sites.

62. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the use of unused public land.

65. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the use of green field sites.

69. Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the use of unused public land.

71. Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the use of unused public land.

73. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the use of green field sites.

75. Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the abandonment of the five-year land bank.

82. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the use of green field sites.

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the draft planning circular regarding the development of unused public land.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan)

Departmental Telephone Numbers

53. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the reasons for the change in his Department's telephone numbers; and what steps have been taken to inform hon. Members in advance of the changes.

Mr. Ridley: The Department of the Environment's telephone system is being modernised as part of the wider scheme to modernise the telephone network linking Government offices in the Whitehall area.

The existing large exchange which serves the Department of the Environment and others is being phased out and replaced by a number of modern digital exchanges situated in the buildings they serve.

In some cases it has been necessary to keep both the old and the new exchanges running in parallel, and when this has happened a new telephone number has been required for Departments.

The switchboard supervisor at the House was informed of new ministerial office numbers in the first week after the change. Arrangements have also been made to direct incoming calls on old numbers to the appropriate new numbers.

I regret no steps were taken to inform Members individually.

Nitrate

55. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards increasing the permitted level of nitrates in water from 50 mg/litre to 100 mg/litre.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government's policy is to comply with the standard of 50 mg of nitrate per litre of drinking water set in the European Commission directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/778/EEC).

Council House Sales

57. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of total council house sales receipts currently held by housing authorities in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: At 31 March 1987, local authorities in England are estimated to have held £3,714 million of cash backed receipts attributable to their housing functions. Returns for 31 March 1988 are not yet available, but such receipts are estimated to have increased by then to £4·2 billion.

80. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold under the right-to-buy legislation since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: Up to the end of March 1988, English local authorities and new towns had sold 709,300 dwellings under the right-to-buy legislation.

Rural Housing

58. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding his proposals for housing in rural areas.

Mrs. Roe: We have had no formal representations. Comments on the discussion paper "Village Housing and New Villages" have been requested by 26 September.

Arpley Meadows Dumping Site

59. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 22 June, Official Report, column 621, if he will make a further statement regarding the outcome of his discussions with representatives of Cheshire county council concerning the future of the Arpley Meadows dumping site.

Mr. Moynihan: At my meeting with representatives of Cheshire county council we discussed the proposal to import domestic waste from the United States of America and the problems this may pose with regard to the county's long-term disposal plan, local amenity and plant and animal health.

I was most encouraged to learn of the seriousness with which the council is dealing with these problems as part of its responsibilities for planning and licensing of waste disposal. The Government are continuing to examine the wider implications of the proposals. Meanwhile it remains for the council to consider the proposal that has been put to it taking all relevant factors into account.

The hon. Member will have noted my remarks in the Adjournment debate on 29 June during which I made the Government's position clear.

Cleveland

60. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed in local government in the county of Cleveland and its four borough councils in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

March figures

	1979			1988
	Full time	Part time	Total	Full time	Part time	Total
Cleveland CC	17,462	9,716	27,178	16,347	13,516	29,863
Hartlepool	1,511	167	1,678	975	146	1,121
Langbeurgh	1,610	238	1,848	1,290	351	1,641
Middlesborough	1,931	270	2,201	1,896	306	2,202
Stockton-on-Tees	2,493	232	2,725	1,509	228	1,737
Total	25,007	10,623	35,630	22,017	14,547	36,564

Association of County Councils

61. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the officers of the Association of County Councils; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ridley: I met the local authority associations, including the ACC, at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 11 July. The items discussed were my statement of 7 July on local government finance; community charge preparation costs; the development of grant-related expenditure assessment for the 1989-90 RSG settlement; and the consultation paper on capital expenditure and finance.

Cemetery Sales (Westminster)

63. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received asking him to exercise his powers to order an extraordinary audit in relation to the disposal of cemeteries by Westminster city council.

78. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further representations he has received asking him to exercise his powers to order an extraordinary audit of Westminster city council in relation to the disposal of that authority's assets.

Mr. Chope: Twenty-five since 4 January.

Hooliganism

64. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet European Ministers for sport to discuss common problems of hooliganism.

Mr. Moynihan: I attended the Council of Europe's 13th informal meeting of Ministers responsible for sport in Athens on 1-2 June 1988 which, inter alia, discussed spectator violence, and I will be attending the Council's 6th conference of Sports Ministers in Reykjavik on 31 May to 1 June 1989, when hooliganism will again be on the agenda. One of my officials is today chairing a meeting of the standing committee of the European convention on spectator violence.

Development Land Bank

66. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is considering relaxing the requirements in PPG3 (1/88) that planning authorities maintain a five-year land bank for development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. It remains the case that planning authorities should ensure that there is a five-year housing land supply consistent with the provisions of the development plan, including any policies for the phasing of residential development. The development plan is the proper context for determining the appropriate level of future housing provision, but its purpose would be defeated if steps were not taken to ensure that the land needed to meet that provision is actually available.

Empty Properties

67. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the number of empty properties owned by local authorities in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: We have received a number of representations recently about empty council dwellings, almost all supporting legislative measures to get them back into use. I am not responsible for Wales.

National Cricket Coaching System

68. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to establish a national cricket coaching system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: A national cricket coaching system was introduced in 1952. The scheme is run by the National Cricket Association, on behalf of the Cricket Council, the game's overall governing body.

Water Supply Pipes

70. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many kilometres of England's and Wales's water supply pipes are bitumen-lined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am advised that, as a broad estimate, 200,000 km of water mains in England and Wales are lined with bituminous materials.

Derelict Land Grant

74. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of waste land have been brought back into use as a result of derelict land grant since its inception.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available. However, between 1 April 1974 and 31 March 1987, 40,500 acres of derelict land in England have been reclaimed with the aid of derelict land grant.

Housing (Disabled People)

76. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement concerning the provision of housing for the disabled in Leicester.

Mrs. Roe: Leicester's housing investment programme return shows that the housing department knows neither how many dwellings it has which are suitable for the disabled, nor how many disabled people there are on its waiting list. The first requirement, therefore, is for sound, basic information.

Crouch Valley Housing Association

77. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to whether tenants in Rochford will be given full details of the financial implications of the transfer of council properties to the Crouch Valley housing association.

Mrs. Roe: The statutory requirements for tenant consultation where a local authority proposes to dispose of tenanted housing are set out in section 6 and schedule 1 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986. These provisions will apply to disposals to registered housing associations once part 1 of the Housing Bill comes into effect. In the meantime, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has stated that he will not expect to give consent to a disposal unless the local authority has followed the procedures set out in those provisions.

River Pollution

79. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is considering any amendment to the Control of Pollution Act 1974 to prevent industries which pollute rivers from remaining anonymous; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: There is no anonymity for an industry, or for anyone else, found guilty of polluting rivers. However, if a firm considers that disclosure of the terms of a consent would, by revealing trade secrets, unreasonably prejudice its commercial interests, it may apply to the Secretary of State for this information to be excluded from the public register. If the case is accepted, the Secretary of State would then issue a certificate which is noted in the public register. No such certificate has ever been issued. We have no proposals to change these arrangements.

Landfill Costs

81. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on landfill costs in the United Kingdom in relation to those pertaining in other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no reliable and comparable statistics on landfill costs in the United Kingdom and other member states from which sensible conclusions could be drawn.

Paris Commission Meeting

86. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the last annual meeting of the Paris commission held in Lisbon on 15 to 17 June.

Mr. Moynihan: This year's annual meeting of the Paris commission made good progress in a number of areas. The commission endorsed measures taken by member states to reduce pollution from emissions of mercury, cadmium and PCBs in response to earlier recommendations. New recommendations were agreed to reduce inputs of nutrients to those areas of the sea where they were likely to cause pollution, and to develop procedures to restrict the use of tributyl-tin compounds on sea-going vessels. The commission unanimously adopted two new recommendations relating to radioactivity in the marine environment which strengthen the agreement reached at the second North sea conference. Together with the Oslo commission, the commission accepted the invitation in the North sea conference declaration to establish a scientific task force to develop a harmonised programme of studies on the North sea. A decision on the use of oil-based muds in offshore activities was adopted, including a standard for the oil content of drill cuttings, but with reservations from the United Kingdom and Denmark. However, the United Kingdom undertook to review its position on this.

A proposal from Ireland calling for the commission to recommend the closure of Sellafield was not supported.

The commission's annual report, containing an account of its proceedings, will be published in the autumn.

Urban Development Grants (Leicester)

87. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications have been made by Leicester city council since 1983 for urban development grants; and how much has been given to Leicester as a result.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1983 my Department has received 14 applications for urban development grant assistance from Leicester city council. Four grants totalling £0·886 million have been approved.

Chlorofluorocarbons

88. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to exercise his overall responsibility for policy on chlorofluorocarbons in relation to the use of chlorofluorocarbon-related products and the protection of the ozone layer, the needs of developing countries, the ecosystem's conservation requirements and export potential.

Mr. Moynihan: As indicated in my right hon. Friend's answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 20 June, at column 608, the Department of the Environment consults other Government Departments on policy matters relating to chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and the protection of the ozone layer. The Department also has regular meetings with the industries representing producers and users of CFCs.

Greenhouse Effect

90. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new plans he has to help limit the greenhouse effect on the world's climate.

93. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on combating the greenhouse effect on the world's climate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The first priority is to improve our scientific understanding of man-made climate change and its impact on the Environment. We are initiating our own research and playing a full part in international efforts to this end.

Meanwhile, our present understanding strengthens the case for various measures which are in hand or under consideration for other reasons. CFCs, which are powerful greenhouse gases, are to be controlled under the Montreal protocol agreed last year to protect the ozone layer. Realistic pricing of energy to encourage its efficient use and the continued development of sources of power other than fossil fuels will also reduce the generation of greenhouse gases. The exhaust emission standards for small cars agreed by the European Community last month preserve the incentive to develop the fuel-efficient lean-burn engines.

Enterprise Zones

91. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the future of enterprise zones.

Mr. Trippier: Since December 1987 when my right hon. Friend announced that there would be no general extension to the enterprise zone experiment, representations have been received in respect of proposed extensions to the Telford and north-east Lancashire enterprise zones.

Planning Applications

94. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review his Department's relevant circulars to ensure they give specific and unambiguous guidance to local planning authorities about relevant criteria to be applied in determining planning applications.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our planning policy guidance (PPG) and minerals planning guidance (MPG) notes and circulars and other statements provide local planning authorities with extensive planning guidance which must be taken into account, where it is relevant, in determining planning applications

Since the circumstances of development proposals vary widely, this guidance must inevitably be general and will have to be applied appropriately in each case to which it is relevant.

Nirex (Document)

97. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has met representatives of Nirex since the close of consultation on its document "The Way Forward;" and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of Nirex on 4 July. The Government will await proposals from Nirex, to be made in the light of responses to "The Way Forward".

Green Belts

98. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will vary the procedures for extending green belt areas to incorporate green wedges designated by local authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: Proposals for altering the general extent of a green belt in a county structure plan or the detailed boundary in a local plan (or in an old development plan) can be considered in the process of making or modifying the appropriate plan. Our planning policy guidance note on green belts (PPG2) advises that the essential characteristic of green belts is their permanence and their boundaries should be set to endure and should be altered only in exceptional circumstances.

Structure and Local Plans (New Housing)

99. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent he will take county structure plans and other local plans into account in considering major planning applications for new housing development.

Mr. Waldegrave: Section 29 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 requires that the planning decision shall have regard to the provisions of the development plan, so far as material to the application, and to any other material consideration. We have made clear (in planning policy guidance note No. 1) that where the development plan is up to date and relevant to the particular proposal, it should normally be given considerable weight in the decision, and strong contrary planning grounds will have to be demonstrated to justify a proposal which conflicts with the plan.

Consultative Documents

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the length of time given for representations to be received in response to the 20 most recent consultative documents issued by his Department.

Mr. Ridley: Of 21 consultative documents issued by my Department since February 1988, four gave a suggested period for response of three months, two of two and a half months, four of two months, one of seven weeks, six of six weeks, one of five weeks, two of four weeks and one of three weeks.

Parkinson Houses

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current status of approved, or part approved schemes of repair for Parkinson houses, detached, semi-detached and terraced.

Mrs. Roe: Michael Dyson Associates' repair system for Parkinson houses has been licensed by PRC Homes Ltd.; another, by K. Parsons Associates, based on a previous system by Avebury Design Associates, is currently under appraisal. I understand that PRC Homes Ltd. also hopes to receive a further proposed repair system, by Craddy and Partner. These systems allow for semi-detached repair, provided appropriate access can be obtained from adjoining properties. Details are available from PRC Homes Ltd's progress reports, which are deposited in the Library.

Empty Government Property

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of Government-owned property is unoccupied in (a) the Doncaster area and (b) in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: For property in the ownership of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, the percentage of unoccupied property (including properties being prepared for occupation and those in the process of disposal) is as follows:

	Percentage
England and Wales	3·99
Doncaster	nil

City Parks

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to protect city parks from development.

Mr. Waldegrave: Any proposals to develop city parks would have to be considered having regard to the provisions of the development plan and any other material considerations. I should expect that the amenity value of city parks would be important as such a consideration.

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funding his Department has made available for housing co-operatives in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are providing direct support in 1988-89 as follows:

—£632,000 in grant so far approved for housing associations and secondary co-ops to provide housing management advice, education and training services to primary co-ops.

—£53,000 towards the cost of staff employed by the National Federation of Housing Co-operatives.

The Housing Corporation is providing the following support in 1988-89 for co-ops which are registered housing associations:

—£22·24 million so far allocated for the capital costs of schemes;

—£3·58 million in mini-HAG for short-life projects (of which the bulk will go to co-op schemes);

—£131,500 for secondary co-ops.

I announced on 16 June, at column 251, a review of the arrangements for promoting and supporting co-ops, and invited interested parties to submit representations by 29 July. I have asked the review team to report by the end of the year.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he possesses on the final report of the European Parliament's special committee of inquiry into the handling and transport of nuclear waste and nuclear materials in the EEC; and whether the report contains any information or recommendations pertinent to his Departmental policy on the management of nuclear wastes.

Mr. Moynihan: The report of the European Parliament's special committee of inquiry into the Mol/Transnuklear affair was produced earlier this month and the Department has been notified of its recommendations. The European Commission is expected to formulate proposals in response to the committee's findings shortly. We shall consider these when they arise.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Housing Corporation; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Roe: I last met the chairman of the Housing Corporation on 30 June when we discussed the tenants' guarantee and other issues relating to the future work of the Housing Corporation.

DEFENCE

Mr. Wallace and Captain Holroyd

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has anything to add concerning the allegations surrounding the service in Northern Ireland by Mr. Colin Wallace and Captain Fred Holroyd, following the Adjournment debate on 20 June about psychological warfare operations in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Mr. Wallace joined Government service as an assistant information officer at Headquarters Northern Ireland in 1968 and became a senior information officer in 1974. His job as a senior information officer in Northern Ireland was to brief the press on military operations and terrorist activities in the Province. As is customary, it would have been necessary on occasions to give such briefings on an unattributable basis. But of course it was not part of his job to hand over classified documents to the media. Shortly after he left Northern Ireland for a new post in Great Britain it was discovered that a classified document had been delivered by Mr. Wallace to the London home of a journalist on The Times.

Mr. Wallace was suspended for handing over the document, and it was decided that he should be dismissed from the Civil Service. Clearly, it is impossible to employ in a position of trust as an information officer, with constant access to the media, someone who deliberately leaks classified information to the press.

Mr. Wallace was disciplined for releasing a classified document without authority. His case was subsequently considered by the Civil Service Appeal Board in 1975. The Civil Service Appeal Board accepted the Ministry of Defence argument that Mr. Wallace was bound by the security regulations and that he had no authority to release classified information.

The board agreed that Mr. Wallace could not remain in the Civil Service but found that, in view of his previous good service, he should be allowed to resign rather than be dismissed.

For the next few years Mr. Wallace appears to have been out of contact with the Department. In the light of his subsequent allegations this long period of apparent silence might seem rather surprising. In 1981 he was convicted of manslaughter. This case was entirely unrelated to his service in Northern Ireland. In 1982, Mr. Wallace's attention focused on the investigation by Sir George Terry, the chief constable of the Sussex police, into alleged homosexual offences against those in care in homes and hostels for young children and persons in Northern Ireland, including the Kincora boys' home. He alleged that both the Army and the intelligence services knew of the homosexual activities at Kincora long before the matter became public and that rather than reporting these criminal activities they sought to use the information for their own ends. The police were of course anxious that Mr. Wallace should give them any information in his possession which could help them in their inquiries.

The Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland gave an assurance that Mr. Wallace would not be prosecuted for any breach of the Official Secrets Act in respect of any information which he communicated concerning these matters. Additionally at Mr. Wallace's specific request, the director of Army security separately authorised Mr. Wallace to disclose to the RUC any information in his possession directly relevant to the investigation, which he gained during the course of his employment with the Ministry of Defence.

Following an approach to the Prime Minister it appeared that Mr. Wallace was concerned that information which he might give to the investigators might be used as evidence for charges against him. The Prime Minister drew attention to the assurances already given that he would not be prosecuted on any charge on the basis of evidence he might provide in answering questions put to him in the course of the investigations. Mr. Wallace was also concerned about the provision of legal advice and assistance, and the Lord Chancellor provided advice as to how he should apply for legal aid. In spite of every effort being made to remove obstacles from his path, Mr. Wallace apparently felt unable to help the RUC. In parallel with all this, Mr. Wallace petitioned the Home Secretary about the circumstances of his conviction for manslaughter in 1981, claiming that he had been wrongly convicted and claiming that this was part of a cover-up to prevent him revealing what he knew about Kincora. It was explained to him that there was no known link between his conviction for manslaughter and either his resignation from the Ministry of Defence, or allegations concerning the Kincora boys' home in Northern Ireland, these matters having already been the subject of inquiries by the appropriate authorities, in the course of which Mr. Wallace was given every opportunity to make his views known. In any case, it is not clear how his conviction could have prevented him from revealing what he knew.

Mr. Wallace's representations about his convictions were fully and extensively investigated. Nothing emerged which cast serious doubts upon his conviction or offered any grounds for the Home Secretary to intervene.

In 1985, the question arose of Mr. Wallace presenting evidence to the committee of inquiry into children's homes and hostels (chaired by his honour Mr. W. H. Hughes), which had been appointed by the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland in the wake of Sir George Terry's investigations to focus on the administration of children's homes where homosexual abuse had occurred and how those responsible for residential child care had discharged their responsibilities. Again, the director of Army security wrote to Mr. Wallace, confirming that he could disclose to members of the committee any information in his possession which was directly relevant to the investigation including, where necessary, information gained in the course of his employment with the Ministry of Defence and which might be security classified.

It was also made clear to Mr. Wallace that the Ministry of Defence would not wish to prevent him from presenting any relevant evidence he may have to the committee or, if he believed he had evidence of unlawful activity, to the police. He had been given all the assurance he could possibly need to enable him to make available to the RUC any relevant information without fear that it would be used subsequently against him. It was further explained to him that although he had been unwilling to release a file which he had forwarded to the Prime Minister in November 1984, but to which he apparently attached some significance, the Government had, at the committee's request, given the committee acccess to all the papers from the file of which it retained copies. Mr. Wallace was also told that a specific document to which he attached particular significance was among those which had been passed to the inquiry by the RUC. Mr. Wallace was further advised that any further relevant material he had would be a matter for the inquiry, or if it involved unlawful activity, the police.

Mr. Wallace also received an assurance that there was no geographical limitation on the undertaking given him that any relevant evidence that he gave to the Kincora inquiry would not subsequently be used against him. Thus the way seemed clear for Mr. Wallace to give his evidence —if he had any—to that inquiry.

The result of the inquiry's approaches to him is recorded in paragraphs 4.70 to 4.87 of the Kincora report which was published on 4 February 1986. It concluded that Mr. Wallace had declined to give straight answers to questions or to authenticate alleged documents. And that in connection with the RUC's investigation whose scope was wider than the inquiry, he had been asked whether he would be interviewed about all the allegations in the documents made available to the inquiry but had refused. Despite repeated approaches, he refused to substantiate his allegations and the inquiry therefore concluded that his evidence had no value.

The other individual who has made allegations is a retired officer, Captain Holroyd, who was employed in Northern Ireland on confidential and exacting duties at a time when he was also under the strains of severe personal bereavements. At this time he appeared to be suffering from stress and his commanding officer considered he should seek medical help. The initial report from the commanding officer referred to a possible mental problem.

Since the situation in the Province at the time precluded the admission of a military officer to a civilian psychiatric hospital for reasons of personal safety, he was returned to England and referred to the Royal Victoria hospital, Netley. While in hospital, Captain Holroyd wrote letters resigning from his post in Northern Ireland and resigning from the Army. However, he also decided to appeal to the Army board of the Defence Council against his referral to Netley on the grounds that this would damage his career as he felt he would forever carry a stigma as a psychiatric patient. The Army board confirmed that no stigma was attached to his removal from his appointment and agreed that all references to a mental problem be removed from his personal records. However, Captain Holroyd was not satisfied and wanted the medical record amended also. The Army board felt unable to do this as it considered that it could not supress a doctor's expression of his professional opinion. Furthermore, such alterations could in future prove to be against the well-being of the patient. In addition, Captain Holroyd was assured that the fact that he had been referred to Netley would not affect his future career. Despite having this assurance and having had part of his appeal upheld, Captain Holroyd was not satisfied and he resigned from the Army in September 1976.

Six years later, Captain Holroyd wrote to the Army legal services department, making serious allegations about the circumstances which led to his resignation from the Army. He mentioned releasing information for the purpose of obtaining publicity for his grievances. The importance of acting responsibly in the matter was stressed to him, not only for his own sake, but for the sake of lives in Northern Ireland, in respect of classified or privileged information that he had obtained during the course of his duties.

The records relating to the circumstances of his resignation were re-examined and nothing was found to substantiate his allegations. It was considered there were no grounds for reopening his case. As to his allegations of criminal behaviour by the Army in Northern Ireland, which he had said he would divulge if it were necessary to clear his name of the stigma he considered was attached to him, the Ministry of Defence advised him that his proper course was to put all his allegations to the police. He put these before the Essex police and they were subsequently investigated by the RUC.

In 1984, while the RUC investigation was still continuing, Captain Holroyd managed to interest a journalist in his case, who ran a series of articles about alleged criminal activity in the Province by the security forces. In November 1984 the cases of Mr. Wallace and Captain Holroyd merged, when Captain Holroyd wrote to the Prime Minister, repeating his allegation of criminal activity and enclosing a file provided by Mr. Wallace. Captain Holroyd was reminded that all his allegations of criminal activites had been the subject of a very thorough investigation by the RUC. He was also assured that Mr. Wallace's case had also been the subject of the most rigorous investigations, following petitions to the Home Secretary about his trial and conviciton and the most thorough enquiries into the circumstances which led to Mr. Wallace's resignation from the Ministry of Defence and into the Kincora affair, and that in both cases Mr. Wallace had been given every opportunity to make his views known. Mr. Wallace's file was returned to Captain Holroyd.

In December 1984 the Director of Public Prosecutions Northern Ireland concluded that the evidence concerning Captain Holroyd's allegations did not warrant the initiation of criminal proceedings against any person; nor did he request any further investigation to be undertaken.

The two strands of this story should be drawn together at this point, as nothing new of any consequence has arisen since the conclusion in 1984 of the RUC's investigations into Captain Holroyd's allegations, or the publication of the results of the Hughes inquiry in 1986. Neither has put any fresh evidence since then to the RUC or any other appropriate authority. However, both Mr. Wallace and Captain Holroyd have continued to pursue their grievances. Their allegations remain completely unsubstantiated.

The position rests as I described it in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 3 March 1987, at column 577. The various allegations made by Captain Holroyd and Mr. Colin Wallace over many years about the conduct of the security forces in Northern Ireland have been fully and carefully investigated since they brought them to the attention of the authorities some years after they left the province in 1975. No evidence has been discovered as a result of those investigations to substantiate any of their allegations.

Clansman Radio Outfits

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that the Royal Marines 3 Commando Brigade and its support services are fully equipped with Clansman radio outfits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Royal Marines 3 Commando Brigade and its support services are already fully equipped with Clansman radios. As is our normal practice, we keep this requirement under review.

NATO (Conventional Defence)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the special areas identified in the 1985 North Atlantic Treaty Organisation conventional defence improvement plan of action; and what special effort has been made in each such area.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A number of areas identified in the conventional defence improvements exercise have been set out in the communiqués of the defence planning committee meeting on 22 May 1985 and of subsequent defence planning committee meetings, copies of which are available in the Library. Details of the exercise are confidential; progress so far has been good.

Press and Broadcasting Committee

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the membership, role and functions of the defence press and broadcasting committee.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The membership of the defence press and broadcasting committee is:

Member	Role	Function
Sir Michael Quinlan	Permanent Under Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence	Chairman
J. M. Ramsden	Editor-in-Chief, Flight International	Vice Chairman and representing Periodical Publishers Association
Sir Clive Whitmore	Permanent Under Secretary of State, Home Office
K. C. Macdonald	Second Permanent Under Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence
J. D. I. Boyd	Deputy Under Secretary of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office
J. Bishop	Editor-in-Chief, Illustrated London News Group	Representing Periodical Publishers Association
P. Cole	Deputy Managing Editor ITN	Representing ITN
J. K. Donlan	Managing Editor, News and Special Projects, The Sun	Representing Newspaper Publishers Associa-tion
M. Hoy	Managing Editor, The Times	Representing Newspaper Publishers Associa-tion
E. Laird	Editor-in-Chief, Sunday Mail, Glasgow	Representing Scottish Daily Newspaper Society
A. C. D. Stuart	Editor-in-Chief, Thomson Regional Newspapers Limited	Representing Newspaper Society
D. Trelford	Editor, The Observer	Representing Newspaper Publishers Associa-tion
C. Webb	Editor-in-Chief, The Press Association	Representing Press Association
K. Whetstone		Representing Newspaper Society
J. Wilson	Controller, Editorial Policy, BBC	Representing BBC
Secretary	Rear Admiral W. A. Higgins (Retired)
Deputy Secretary	Rear Admiral A. J. Whetstone (Retired)

The defence press and broadcasting committee is a joint Government—media committee established to provide advice to editors, publishers and producers on the publication of information which the Government consider they have a duty to protect in the interests of national security. The day-to-day business of the committee is conducted by its secretary and the committee meets as circumstances dictate but no less frequently than once every six months. The D notice system is advisory and voluntary, and has no statutory force.

Pensions

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it would cost to standardise at the current levels the pensions payable to widows under the war pension scheme and to beneficiaries of the armed forces pension scheme.

Mr. Freeman: Differences between the total pensions received by war widows whose husbands were killed before April 1973, and subsequently arise mainly from the introduction at that date of improvements to the armed forces occupational pension scheme. Those improvements did not apply retrospectively. It has been estimated that to bring all war widows up to current levels of award would involve additional expenditure in the region of £200 million a year.

Nuclear-capable Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to how many of the United States F15E nuclear-capable aircraft equipped with the new medium range cruise missiles will be stationed in Britain.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 December 1987 at columns 708-9.

Small Firms Advice Division

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken to ensure that his Department's small firms advice division does only work which cannot be carried out by the private sector.

Mr. Sainsbury: The activities of the small firms advice division are entirely appropriate to the public sector. In particular, the division does not undertake dedicated, in-depth consultancy work; nor is there any intention that it should do so.

RAF Sculthorpe

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is considering any plans or proposals to expand flying activity at RAF Sculthorpe during 1989.

Mr. Freeman: There are no plans to expand flying activity at RAF Sculthorpe over and above the temporary deployments of aircraft to the base which have regularly taken place during recent years for exercises, or when aircraft have been displaced from their home stations by airfield maintenance work.

RAF Scampton

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is considering any plans or proposals to expand flying activity at RAF Scampton during 1989.

Mr. Freeman: No.

RAF Binbrook

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is considering any plans or proposals to expand flying activity at RAF Binbrook during 1989.

Mr. Freeman: No. RAF Binbrook, which ceased operational flying in May this year, is now designated as a relief landing ground. In April-November 1989, while the runway at RAF Waddington is closed for repair, Jet Provost aircraft from RAF Scampton, which normally practice diversions to RAF Waddington, will use RAF Binbrook instead. However, the level of activity at RAF Binbrook will remain significantly lower than when the station was operational.

RAF Waddington

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is considering any plans or proposals to expand flying activity at RAF Waddington during 1989.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Military Aircraft (Accidents)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any military aircraft accident summary reports on accidents or incidents concerning RAF aircraft in categories 4 and 5 have been produced.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. Since 1980 military aircraft accident summaries have been published on accidents concerning RAF aircraft involving category 4 or 5 damage. Copies are placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider opportunities for the United Kingdom to share details with the Soviet Union of yields of its nuclear tests, conducted at the United States nuclear test site in Nevada, to complement the exchange of similar information on United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics nuclear tests carried out on 28 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: The exchanges referred to were part of the US/USSR protocol on the joint verification experiment (JVE). As my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement stated in another place on 30 June, the JVE and the associated exchange of data are bilateral initiatives by the US and USSR aimed at securing ratification of their bilateral threshold test ban treaty.

RAF Aircraft (Accidents)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents or incidents concerning RAF aircraft in the categories 1 to 5 have occurred since April 1985.

Mr. Freeman: Damage to RAF aircraft is categorised on the following basis:

Incidents

a. Category 1—The damage is repairable on site by established first line personnel. (1)

b. Category 2—The damage is repairable on site by established second line personnel. (2)

Accidents

c. Category 3—The damage is repairable on site but is beyond unit technical resources. Assistance from a repair and salvage unit or civilian contractor is required.

d. Category 4—The damage is not repairable on site. The aircraft must be removed to an established depot or civilian repair organisation.

e. Category 5—The aircraft is damaged beyond repair or is missing, or in accordance with current Ministry of Defence policy, is not worth repairing.

(1) First line personnel conduct before flight, after flight and turnround servicing including minor component changes.

(2) Second line personnel conduct deeper servicing, including major component changes and structural repair.

On this basis the information requested is as follows:

Damage Category	1st April 1985—December 1985	1986	1987	January 1988—15 July 1988
1/2	2,756	3,755	3,492	1,908
3	41	43	37	18
4	1	0	0	1
5	11	16	14	10
Total	2,809	3,814	3,543	1,937

Note: It is not possible to separate damage in Categories 1 and 2.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas (Delays)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why there are delays in processing applications for visas by Polish visitors to Britain; and if he will take immediate steps to rectify the delays.

Mr. Mellor: In the first five months of this year visa applications unexpectedly increased by 15 per cent. Measures have since been taken to reduce the delays that resulted.

Romania-United Kingdom (Marriage Applications)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate, as at 10 July, and list according to the date of application, the outstanding applications-to-marry cases currently lodged with the Governments of the United Kingdom and Romania in respect of Romanian citizens wishing to marry United Kingdom nationals; and if he will identify the recorded occupation of each Romanian applicant.

Mr. Mellor: The list of outstanding Anglo/Romanian marriage applications known to us on 10 July was as follows:

Miss Anne SWEENEY
Mr. Floring MOCANU (profession not known)
Registered 17 July 1986

Mrs. Lucia LAMBERT
Mr. Petre CLAR (engineer)
Registered 9 March 1987

Mr. Peter Anthony KENNEDY
Miss Gabriela ENE (teacher)
Registered 27 April 1987

Miss Audrey MOORE
Mr. Constatin CIMPIAN (economist)
Registered 23 September 1987

Mr. John Miller RITCHIE
Ms. Maria SUCIA (unemployed)

Registered 23 March 1988

Mr. Michael Lewis John SELBY
Miss Beatrice Mihaela SANDU (profession not known)
Registered 23 March 1988

Miss Sarah Jane CREEDY
Mr. Petru SIMION (Worker)
Registered 30 March 1988

Miss Susan Louise INGRAM
Mr. Sorin Paul ULRICH (locksmith)
Registered 4 April 1988

Mr. Mark BEAN
Miss Gabriella Paula MURANYI (computer programmer)
Registered 20 April 1988

Eleven other cases were resolved by the Romanian authorities after delays of up to 16 months on 8 July. A further three cases have been resolved since 10 July: Miss Sweeney/Mr. Mocanu, Mrs. Lambert/Mr. Clar, and Mr. Kennedy/Miss Ene. The Romanians have told us that Miss Moore/Mr. Cimpian have withdrawn their application.

Children's Rights

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any articles in the current draft of the proposed United Nations convention on the rights of the child conflict with current United Kingdom legislation or practice with regard to the rights of children.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 1 July.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on finalising the draft United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Mellor: The first reading of the draft United Nations convention on the rights of the child was completed at this year's meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, which ended in March. The second reading is due to commence later this year.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the proposal for the United Nations to establish a committee to monitor implementation of the proposed convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Mellor: We support the proposal that there should be a committee to monitor the implementation of the proposed convention on the rights of the child.

Cellmark Diagnostics

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average length of time which elapses between the sending of a telex in DNA cases from Cellmark Diagnostics and the calling for sampling of the family concerned.

Mr. Mellor: Appointment for sampling is made by Dhaka and Islamabad on receipt of the telex from Cellmark Diagnostics and, in most cases, the sample is actually taken four weeks after the telex is received.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs into which queue a fiancé(e) who was refused entry and who then applied as a husband or wife would fall.

Mr. Mellor: Re-applicant spouses previously refused as fiancé(e)s are placed in Q4. However, if, for example, the reason for the refusal was on the grounds that the couple had not met and they had since been able to show that they had met, they would be placed in Q2.

Immigration Interviews

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present waiting times to first interview for all categories of applicant in each country in the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:.

Q1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases;
Q2 All spouses, and all children under 18 years;
Q3 Fiance(e)s and others applying for the first time for settlement;
Q4 Re-applicants.

Immigration (Primary Purpose Rule)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new instructions have been sent to visa officers at British posts abroad about the way in which they should operate the primary purpose rule, in the light of the decisions in ex parte Kumar and ex parte Hoque; and when these instructions will be published.

Mr. Mellor: No instructions have been issued, but further guidance was sent to posts in the Indian sub-continent on 8 July 1988 and subsequently to other posts.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances and for what reasons staff at British posts overseas state the maximum duration of an intended visit when issuing a visa.

Mr. Mellor: Staff at posts overseas will, if asked, advise visa applicants that the duration of stay is at the discretion of the immigration officer at the port of arrival in this country but that visits are normally restricted to six months.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long he estimates a person applying for entry clearance for settlement at the British post in (a) Manila, (b) Accra, (c) Lagos, (d) Kingston, (e) Nicosia, and (f) Cairo on 31 March, or on the latest convenient date, will wait for (i) interview, (ii) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received in the post, (iii) decisions and (iv) an explanatory statement prepared by the post in the event of an appeal against a refusal to be despatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: The available information sought at (ii) and (iii) is not available. Processing times vary considerably from case to case. As to (i) and (iv) the position as at 15 July 1988 is as follows:

	(i)	(iv)
Manila	17 weeks	16 weeks
Accra	Same day	12 weeks
Lagos	Same day	5 weeks
Kingston	Same day	16 weeks

Q2. All spouses, and all children under 18 years.
Q3. Fiance(e)s and others applying for the first time for settlement.
Q4. Re-applicants.

On (b) and (c), this information is not available. Processing times vary considerably from case to case.

On (d), the information is not yet available for all posts in the Indian sub-continent and is being sought. I will write to the hon. Member when I receive the replies.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many explanatory statements, related to entry clearance appeals, are awaiting typing at the British embassy at Islamabad; how many typists are employed full-time and part-time at the post; how many spouses or partners of embassy staff are retained to type documents at home; when he expects the backlog in typing appeal statements to be cleared; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: On 15 July 1988 there were 993 explanatory statements awaiting typing at the British embassy in Islamabad. There are nine full-time typists and one part-time typist in the visa section. No spouses of embassy staff are retained to type documents at home. It is hoped that the backlog in the typing of explanatory statements will be cleared in three months.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training in operating modern office equipment is given to entry clearance officers prior to appointment, or after appointment, to British overseas posts, in particular those on the Indian sub-continent; and what modern office equipment is available at (a) all overseas posts and (b) Islamabad.

Mr. Mellor: All entry clearance officers going to posts with FCO-standard computer systems (which includes all posts in the Indian sub-continent) are offered pre-posting training on IT equipment. In addition, on-site training is provided as required by visiting trainers. Training for officers at posts with non-standard systems is provided by use of commercial training courses in the United Kingdom or at the posts.

On (a), a wide range of multi-user microcomputers, running standard software, has been installed in 94 posts, including all those in the Indian sub-continent. This represents some 1,000 work stations. A further 20 posts have other multi-user microcomputers running non-standard software. In addition there are 36 posts with stand-alone word processors for general use. On (b), in Islamabad FCO-standard systems were installed in November 1987. Islamabad has a total of 31 work stations, of which 15 are in the immigration consular Sections. The purchase and training in the use of other items of office equipment is, for the most part, arranged by posts overseas themselves and central records are not maintained.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any contact with his counterparts in the United States of America or Soviet Union since the recent Moscow summit on the prospects and arrangements for conveying to the Soviet Union the details of yields of United Kingdom nuclear tests conducted at the United States nuclear test site at Nevada.

Mr. Mellor: There has been no such contact. But the United Kingdom already publicly notifies all nuclear tests which it conducts. These are of a kilotonnage which falls within the limits set by the so far unratified bilateral United States/Soviet threshold test ban treaty.

China (Claims Agreement)

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in regard to the distribution of the moneys received from the People's Republic of China under the claims agreement of 5 June 1987.

Mr. Mellor: Determination of claims against the China compensation fund was entrusted under the Foreign Compensation (People's Republic of China) Order 1987 to the Foreign Compensation Commission which is being assisted in performance of its administrative and executive tasks by the private accountants Ernst and Whinney.

By the deadline for submission of bond claims on 30 June, 1,849 claims in respect of 233, 941 bonds with face values in 15 different currencies had been received. However, these figures may rise slightly as the commission considers in the light of the provisions of the commission's China rules of 1988 those cases where applicants had given notice of their claims, but had not delivered application forms to the commission on or before the cut-off date.

The deadline for submission of claims against the China fund in respect of debts, bank balances, shares and other property is 31 August. Application forms have been sent by Ernst and Whinney to the 542 claimants registered under the 1980 order (who are required to resubmit their claims under the 1987 order) and to 550 new inquirers. Thus far, 368 property claims have been received.

Those who intend to submit property claims before the 31 August deadline should contact the Foreign Compensation Commission c/o Ernst and Whinney, Alexandra House, Kingsway, London WC2B 6TT (Telephone 01-379-7088) to obtain application forms and explanatory leaflets if they have not already done so.

British Telecom
(International Products and Overseas Division)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made to the effect on the dividend to be received by Her Majesty's Government of the operating losses of the International Products and Overseas Division of British Telecom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No estimate has been made. The amount of the dividend is a commercial matter for British Telecom.

Alcohol (Excise Duty)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the level of excise duty on alcohol for each of the last 10 years, taking the level in 1977 as a base of 100.

Mr. Lilley: Following is the information.

[2] Duty bands restructured from 14 March 1984.

Public Expenditure

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the percentage increases or decreases on expenditure since 1979 in real terms of each of the 17 programmes of public expenditure.

Mr. Major: The information requested can be derived from either table 5.8 (Planning total in real terms by Department, 1978-79 to 1990-91) or table 5.12 (Planning total in real terms by function, 1978-79 to 1990-91) in Volume I of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" (Cm. 288).

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the latest figure for estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Management and Personnel Office on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material;

(2) what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of the Management and Personnel Office;

(3) what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by the Management and Personnel Office on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Brooke: Nil. Under the provisions of the Transfer of Functions (Minister for the Civil Service and Treasury) Order 1987, which took effect on 25 December last year, the Management and Personnel Office ceased to exist as a Government Department; its work being divided between Her Majesty's Treasury and the newly created office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

Cash Limits

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give revised cash limits for 1988-89 resulting from the carry forward of capital underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility scheme for central Government and for local authority expenditure.

Mr. Major: A list of revised cash limits totalling £567·740 million is shown in the following table. The increases in cash limits on central Government votes are subject to parliamentary approval for the necessary Supplementary Estimates.

The total increase classified as public expenditure is £574·062 million. This sum will be met from the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Computer Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many computer work stations there are in his Departments; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 20 July 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

HM Treasury

The Treasury, which includes the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, Chessington Computer Centre and the Civil Service Catering Organisation, has 1,300 computer work stations. The overall ratio of work stations to staff is about 1:2·5. This figure includes all terminals and microcomputers but excludes stand-alone dedicated word processors. Planned expansions by the year 1993 will bring the overall ratio to about 1:1·5.

Inland Revenue

There are at present over 37,500 computer work stations in use within the Inland Revenue representing a ratio of 1:1·77 work stations to staff. The Department expects the number of terminals to grow significantly over the next five years as several major computer systems are implemented, increasing the ratio of terminals to staff.

Customs and Excise

The number of computer work stations in HM Customs and Excise is 2,750. There is a ratio of 1:9·5 on current staff in post in the Department.

Over the next five years a steady increase in the number of work stations is expected, rising to a total of approximately 7,500. This will represent a ratio of approximately 1:3·5 based on current staff in post.

National Savings

There are about 1,600 computer work stations in National Savings and 7,400 posts: a ratio of 1:4·6. Over the next five years the ratio is expected to increase to about 1:3.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

HMSO currently has 1,073 computer work stations, which is approximately 1:3 of the 3,200 permanent staff. It is estimated that in five years' time the ratio will be 2:3.

Paymaster General's Office

Within the Paymaster General's Office there are currently 241 work stations, equal to a ratio of 1:3·4 civil servants. This is expected to increase to a ratio of 1:1·2 civil servants over the next five years.

Central Office of Information

The Central Office of Information currently has 87 computer work stations at a ratio of one per 10 civil servants in the Department. This figure is expected to rise to 425 work stations at a ratio of one per two civil servants over the next five years if the current staffing level is maintained.

The Royal Mint

The Royal Mint currently has in use approximately 70 computer work stations which include stand-alone personal computers and visual display units connected to the main computer network. The ratio of work stations to non-industrial civil servants is one work station to every 4½ non-industrial staff.

Over the next five years, the use of work stations is expected to increase significantly and it is estimated that the ratio of work stations to non-industrial civil servants will increase to one work station to every three non-industrial staff.

Registry of Friendly Societies

The Registry of Friendly Societies has 67 computer work stations and the ratio of work stations to staff is 1:2. Present plans would indicate no significant change in the ratio.

Government Actuary's Department

The Government Actuary's Department has 42 computer work stations, representing 80 per cent. of staff members. Over the next five years the number may increase very slightly as further work conversions are carried out.

National Investment and Loans Office

The National Investment and Loans Office currently has nine computer work stations, giving a ratio of work stations to staff of approximately 1:5.

A further six work stations are estimated to be acquired in the next five years thereby increasing the ratio to 1:3.

Information Technology Strategy Committee

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his departments; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 20 July 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

HM Treasury

The information technology strategy committee (ITSC) is the senior IT committee in the Department, covering IT strategy for central Treasury, CCTA and the Chessington Computer Centre. It is chaired by the principal establishment and finance officer. The members include the directors of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) and the Chessington Computer Centre (CCC) and other representatives at grade 3 and grade 5 levels. Ministers have not attended meetings of ITSC.

Inland Revenue

The senior IT strategy committee in the Inland Revenue is the Board of Inland Revenue, chaired by the permanent secretary with membership at grade 2 level. It had several meetings in the last year dealing with IT issues, and meets from time to time with main suppliers. It is supported by a steering group, chaired at grade 2 level, dealing with the different areas of IT within the Department.

Regular progress reports on major projects are made to Ministers.

Customs and Excise

The information technology strategy committee in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is composed of:

The Government Actuary's Department IT strategy committee consists of the Government Actuary and principal computer officer, supported by a steering committee, including the establishment and finance officers and users' representatives. Ministers have never attended its meetings.

National Investment and Loans Office

The IT strategy committee of the National Investment and Loans Office consists of the director, computer manager and user branch managers as appropriate.

No meetings of the committee have been attended by Ministers in the past year.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of the Inland Revenue with regard to communicating with individuals in Wales who wish to carry out their correspondence with its offices through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 July 1988]: The Inland Revenue's policy is that inquiries written in Welsh to their tax and collection offices in Wales will receive a reply in that language. Where inquiries in Welsh are made to offices elsewhere in the United Kingdom, it would be the practice to try to provide a reply in Welsh.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Major [holding answer 19 July 1988]: The Government's economic policies are designed to maintain a vigorous economy in which business and enterprise can flourish. Among the specific measures helpful to small businesses introduced in the last Budget were:

Small companies' rate of corporation tax reduced to 25 per cent.

Basic rate of income tax reduced to 25p and higher rates above 40 per cent. abolished (benefits unincorporated businesses).

Capital gains rebased to 1982.

Capital gains retirement relief increased.

Inheritance tax threshold increased to £110,000 and four rates replaced by single rate of 40 per cent.

Capital duty abolished.

£4 million limit introduced on amount most companies can raise under business expansion scheme to target relief on smaller companies.

Further improvements to employee share schemes.

VAT registration threshold increased to £22,100, maximum permissible under EC law.

Easing of VAT registration requirements.

Electronic Data Interchange

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Government Departments now operate electronic data interchange.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 19 July 1988]: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Nationalised Industries (Expenditure)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide, pursuant to his written reply, Official Report, 14 June, comparable tables showing the information on expenditure on fixed assets in the United Kingdom by the nationalised industries for the years 1979-80 to 1988-89.

Mr. Major [holding answer 18 July 1988]: The table shows the expenditure on fixed assets in the United Kingdom by nationalised industries for 1979-80 (consistent with table 3.3 of Cmnd. 8175) and 1988-89 plans (consistent with table 4.4 of Cm. 288-I). The 1979-80 figures are given in both cash prices and real terms (base year 1988-89). Also included are the percentages of the industries' capital requirements financed internally for 1979-80. For reasons of confidentiality the Government do not publish estimates of internal resources or external finance by industry for future years. But the current plans imply that, taken together, around 87 per cent. of the industries' capital requirements for 1988-89 can be met from internal resources.

The figures for 1980-81 to 1987-88 are not given in the table on the grounds of disproportionate cost. They can be derived from the public expenditure White Papers for these years.

DEFENCE

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why F-111 aircraft based at RAF Upper Heyford are now heavier when taking off than previously, resulting in a lower flight path over the village of Steeple Aston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As I stated in my written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 16 June 1988 at column 221, a number of modifications have been made to the F-111 during its life which have reduced its thrust-to-weight ratio.

Boeing (AWACS Offset Agreement)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department has made in evaluating the offset reports submitted by Boeing under the terms of the AWACS offset agreement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have completed our evaluation of Boeing's first offset report, which covered the period from November 1986 to June 1987. This report listed contracts covering a wide range of items similar to the high technical quality contained in the AWACS aircraft. The contracts were placed with a number of United Kingdom defence contractors and their value totalled $141 million. Following our evaluation, we have agreed with Boeing that a total offset credit of $96·6 million should be allowed. We are now in the process of evaluating Boeing's second report, which covers the period July to December 1987, listing contracts showing a total value of some $192 million.

Departmental Houses

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the use of Ministry of Defence owned houses outside security areas, by members of the public.

Mr. Freeman: Ministry of Defence houses are provided specifically to accommodate married service personnel, Ministry of Defence police officers and certain key civilian employees. When houses outside security areas become surplus to MOD's long-term requirements and can be sold, they are normally offered either to service men or tenants under one of our internal discount schemes or, if that is not possible, an open market sale is arranged. Sometimes, however, we have houses ouside security areas which we know will be needed in the long-term, but which are, nevertheless, likely to be vacant for at least six months. Wherever possible we offer these properties to local authorities or housing associations on a short lease to house members of the public on a temporary basis. We currently have 378 properties on lease to local authorities in various parts of the country.

Cash Limits

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to make any changes to the defence cash limits for 1988-89.

Mr. Younger: My right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury announced today an increase to the cash limit for Class I, Vote 2 of £322,669,000 under the end year flexibility scheme for central Government expenditure. I can now announce that the cash limit for that Vote will be increased by a further £208·5 million, from £8,613,765,000 to £8,822,265,000. Of this new increase, £206 million comes under the terms of the additional flexibility arrangements I announced to the House on 19 December 1986, Official Report column 778. These arrangements provide for carry forward of underspend resulting from procurement decisions taken to improve contractors' performance and the value for money obtained from our defence procurement contracts during the 1987-88 financial year, including the Department's tauter approach to interim payments. The remaining £2·5 million of the cash limit increase is to compensate the defence budget following a decision to write off part of a debt in respect of loan service and training charges incurred by the Nigerian Government. These sums will be met from within the reserve and will not therefore add to the public expenditure planning total.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in view of the recent awards of special pensions for ill health suffered as a result of exposure to radiation during the British nuclear tests in the 1950s, he will as a matter of urgency review his policy towards the payment of compensation to those former service personnel who have suffered ill health as a result of their involvement in these tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: The decision to review claims for war pensions from those former Service men suffering leukaemia (excluding chronic lymphatic) and multiple myeloma stems from the provision in the war pensions legislation that harm may be regarded as attributable to service factors if there is reliable evidence of reasonable doubt. The possibility of such doubt was caused by the identification in the recent study by the National Radiological Protection Board of a small number of extra cases of these diseases in participants in the nuclear test programme compared with the control group. However, in the absence of more conclusive evidence that these diseases are actually linked to participation, especially with exposure to radiation, even on a balance of probabilities, the Government cannot agree to the payment of any special compensation, since this would require much firmer evidence than is required by the "reasonable doubt" provision in war pensions legislation.

Fraud Investigations (Burghfield)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about the investigation into a fraud at the atomic weapons establishment, Burghfield; and what type of equipment is involved;

(2) how many staff at the atomic weapons establishment, Burghfield, have resigned as a result of possible fraud charges relating to equipment used at the establishment.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature of the fraud at the atomic weapons establishment at Burghfield; what sums were involved; what equipment is missing; whether nuclear materials were involved; and whether the equipment and materials would be of use to a foreign power.

Mr. Sainsbury: This matter is currently being investigated by the Ministry of Defence police and it would therefore be inappropriate to go into detail at present. However I can say that no classified or hazardous equipment or material is known to have been involved and that there is no reason to believe that national security has been prejudiced. One member of the staff has offered his resignation in this connection and this has been accepted.

HMS Conqueror (Collision)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the exact circumstances, including time and location, of the collision between the Dalriada and HMS Conqueror, on 2 July; what damage was sustained by both vessels; what injuries were sustained by the crew of the Dalriada; what other ships were in the area at the time; what services were involved in the rescue; what kind of inquiry he has instituted into the incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: At 0113 on 2 July 1988 a collision occured about 11 nautical miles south of the Mull of Kintyre light between the periscope of the submarine, HMS Conqueror, and the yacht Dalriada, owned by the Army Sail Training Association. Dalriada sustained damage to her side and sank shortly after the collision. HMS Conqueror was undamaged and surfaced immediately after the collision. Dalriada's mayday signal was acknowledged by the frigate, HMS Battleaxe, which was some 5 nautical miles from the collision. She proceeded at once to Dalriada's assistance and recovered her four crew members, who were uninjured. They were subsequently transferred to the Donaghadee lifeboat, from which they were landed at Larne. A formal naval board of inquiry was convened on 2 July to establish the full circumstances of the collision.

HMS Otus (Collision)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the exact circumstances, including time and location, of the collision between the Drum and HMS Otus; what damage was sustained by both vessels; what injuries were sustained by anyone involved; what kind of inquiry he has instituted into the incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: At 02.45 on 16 July 1988 a collision occurred about 7 nautical miles south of the Mull of Kintyre light between the masts of the submarine, HMS Otus, and the yacht Drum. HMS Otus surfaced immediately after the collision. Drum's outer skin was punctured and she also suffered some damage to her guard rails and rigging, but she was able to continue her passage without assistance. HMS Otus's masts were damaged. No one was injured in the collision. A formal naval board of inquiry is currently under way.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the collision between HMS Otus and the yacht Drum occurred in lanes designated for naval use.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The collision occurred in a designated submarine exercise area which is marked as such on Admiralty charts.

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in his Department; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

Mr. Sainsbury: The staff complements by grade in Ministry of Defence statistical divisions for the years in question are as follows:

Grade	[1]1979	[1]1984	[2]1988
Grade 3	1	1	0
Grade 4[3]	0	0	1

[3] Statistical posts

In 1979, there were also 16 service men employed in statistical divisions; equivalent figures for 1984 and 1988 are nine and 15.

A direct comparison between the figures quoted for 1979 and 1984 and the 1988 figures is not possible because a reorganisation in the defence statistical organisation took place in 1985. Prior to that date all defence statistical branches reported to a single Under-Secretary, whereas they are now integrated into a number of different areas within the Ministry of Defence.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material;

(2) what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure in 1988-89 by each of the armed forces on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This information is not held centrally. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Armed Forces (Allowances)

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been taken to ensure that members of the armed forces are aware of the recently announced outcome of the review of armed forces allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: To supplement the usual methods of communicating changes in allowances, presentations were given at major service establishments and units. In addition, a video recording was sent to ships and establishments of the Royal Navy. Also, each of the three services produced a special publication explaining the changes in broad terms to every member of their serving personnel. I have placed a copy of these three publications in the Library of the House for the convenience of right hon. and hon. Members. Work on writing the detailed regulations is proceeding.

Service Personnel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries outside of NATO in which British service personnel are based.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The countries and dependencies outside NATO where British service personnel are based are as follows:

Ascension Island
Belize
British Indian Ocean Territory (Diego Garcia)
Brunei
Cyprus

Falkland Islands (including South Georgia)
Gibraltar
Hong Kong

The list excludes loan service and seconded personnel serving in a number of countries and dependencies throughout the world.

Hong Kong

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the agreement on the future sharing of defence costs between the Hong Kong Government and Her Majesty's Government to be finalised.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Governor of Hong Kong and I yesterday signed in London an agreement on the future sharing of defence costs in Hong Kong. This new defence costs agreement will run from 1 April 1988 to 30 June 1997. Under the new agreement, some items of garrison costs previously shared between the two Governments will be fully funded by one or the other, and the balance of the cost of the garrison will be apportioned between the Hong Kong Government and Her Majesty's Government on a 65:35 basis. I believe that this agreement represents a sound and equitable financial basis for meeting the costs of the garrison from now until 1997.

THE ARTS

Scottish Arts

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been, for each year since 1970, the total contribution to the arts in Scotland by public funds, in 1988 terms.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 14 July 1988]: The Scottish Arts Council is funded by the Arts Council of Great Britain which is supported by grant-in-aid from my expenditure programme. The Scottish Council's estimated expenditure in the current financial year, and its expenditures in the last three years, are as follows:

	1988-89 prices £
1985-86	14,702,000
1086-87	14,910,000
1987-88	14,755,000
1988-89	[1]15,258,000

[1] Estimate.

Note:
Details for earlier years are not readily available.

Grants towards the arts from the expenditure programme for Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will give, for each year since 1970, the total Government grants given in Scotland to (i) the performing arts, (ii) music, (iii) painting, (iv) sculpture and (v) literature in 1988 terms.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 14 July 1988]: The Arts Council of Great Britain, which receives grant-in-aid from my expenditure programme, makes an allocation of funds to the Scottish Arts Council. The Scottish council's estimated grants in the current financial year, and its grants in the last three years, are as follows:

£, 1988-89 prices

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Music	5,838,000	5,969,000	5,833,000	[1]5,909,000

Literature	566,000	620,000	599,000	[1]628,000
Art	1,276,000	1,307,000	1,399,000	[1]1,305,00

[1]Estimate
Details for other spending categories and for earlier years are not readily available.

Grants towards the arts from the expenditure programme for Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he intends to make an official visit to any of the regional theatres in south Yorkshire during 1988.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans to do so. I visited the site of the new West Yorkshire Playhouse on 30 June.

Glasgow

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to visit Glasgow; and when was his last visit.

Mr. Luce: I next intend to visit Glasgow on 18 October for the British American Arts Association symposium on arts and the changing city. I last visited the city on 3 May 1988 when I enjoyed watching part of "The Mahabharata" cycle, and met the director and members of the cast.

Bristol Arts Organisations

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will pay a visit to Bristol arts organisations to discuss funding for the arts in the south-west.

Mr. Luce: I will be visiting Bristol on Thursday 28 July. The level and distribution of arts funding is a matter to be determined by the Arts Council and South West Arts.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Jurors

69. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received on the selection and identification of jurors; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has received one recent representation from a member of the Bar concerning the identification of jurors, which is being considered at present.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Attorney-General when he received from the Director of Public Prosecutions his report on the Crown Prosecution Service for the year 1987-88; and when this report will be laid before Parliament.

The Solicitor-General: The report was received on 19 July and was laid before Parliament on 20 July. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total spending by the Law Officers' Department and the Lord Chancellor's Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

The Solicitor-General: The figures for the Lord Chancellor's Department for 1987-88, excluding staff costs, are as follows:

Press and Public Relations	34,500
Advertising	13,500

My own Department, the Law Officers' Department, makes no expenditure on press, public relations or advertising.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Lord Chancellor's Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

The Attorney-General: The figures for the Lord Chancellor's Department for 1988-89, excluding staff costs, are as follows:

Estimated Expenditure 1988-89

Television Advertising	Nil
Radio Advertising	Nil
Newspaper Advertising	15,000
Other Promotional Material	45,000

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The Attorney-General: At present there are five staff employed in the press and public relations office of the Lord Chancellor's Department, increasing to six in August.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by the Lord Chancellor's Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

The Attorney-General: The estimated expenditure by the Lord Chancellor's Department on press and public relations for 1988-89 is £35,000, excluding staff costs.

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in the Law Officers' Department and that of the Lord Chancellor; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

The Attorney-General: There are no statistical divisions in the Law Officers' Department. The information that is readily available on the number of staff by grade in the statistics branch of the Lord Chancellor's Department is shown in the table.

Grade of Staff in Post	January 1980	July 1984	July 1988
Grade 7/Statistician	1	1	1
Assistant/Senior Assistant Statistician	1	1	1
Senior Executive Officer	1	—	—

Administrative/Clerical Assistant	1	1	2

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Parenthood

71. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in what discussions he is involved about how best to prepare young people to be parents.

Mrs. Rumbold: Preparation for parenthood may form part of the provision made in the school curriculum for personal and social education (PSE). My right hon. Friend is asking the National Curriculum Council to give early priority to considering the content of PSE; he has also asked the subject working groups for the national curriculum to consider how pupils' personal qualities and competencies can be developed through their subjects.

Student Unions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the terms of reference of his Department's review of students unions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many student unions will be investigated by his Department during the current review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many (a) colleges and (b) universities will be investigated by his Department during the current review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what organisations have been consulted by his Department during the current review of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in his Department; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

Mrs. Rumbold: The staff-in-post figures for the Department's statistics branch for 1 April 1979, 1984 and 1988 were as follows:

Grade	1 April 1979[1]	1 April 1984[2]	1 April 1988
3	1	1	1
5	1	1	—
Chief statistician	2	2	2
6	1	1	—
7	5	3	1
Statistician	8·5	7	8
Principal research officer	1	1	1

Senior personal secretary/PS	5	6	3
AO	66	37	22
AA	55	8	12
Senior data processor	11	11	—
Data processor	57	52	—

[1] The figures for 1979 include a number of clerical posts which were later transferred to the Department's Pensions Branch; these cannot readily be identified.

[2] In 1984 the DES Statistics Branch still formed part of a larger branch together with the Department's Computing Services divisions. Computing posts were later transferred to a new Information Technology Branch; the posts transferred cannot readily be identified.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: Total spending, including staff costs, on press, public relations, advertising and departmental publications in 1987-88 was £2·5 million. Costs cannot readily be disaggregated.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest figures for estimated spending by the Department on advertising, publicity and publications for the current financial year (1988-89) are as follows:

Television	nil
Radio	40,000
Newspapers (including magazines and directories)	454,000
Other expenditure (publications, videos, exhibitions etc.)	2,400,000

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of staff employed in the information branch at 20 July 1988 was 33.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest estimated expenditure for the current financial year on press, public relations and departmental publications, including staff costs, is £3·7 million.

Chemistry Week

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition during the week beginning 24 October relating to Chemistry Week to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 24 October to Friday 28 October.

Research Councils

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils in relation to the public expenditure survey for 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am publishing the advice today and would like to express my appreciation to Sir David Phillips and the board for the work they have done. Copies have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office. I will be considering the advice carefully in discussions on the 1988 survey and in the context of the Government's reply to the board's strategy document.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in the Overseas Development Administration; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

	1 April 1979	1 April 1984	1 April 1988
Statistical posts
Chief Statistician (Grade 5)	2	1	1
Statistician (Grade 7)	5	5	4·5
Assistant/Senior Assistant Statistician	4	3	4
Administrative posts
Higher Executive Officer	[1]—	2	1
Executive Officer	[1]—	3	2
Administrative Officer	[1]—	7	5
Personal Secretary	[1]—	1	1
Total	36	22	18·5

[1] An analysis by grade of the administrative posts is not readily available for 1979 and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Horn of Africa (Famine)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government will present its observations on the first report of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Session 1987-88, on "Famine in the Horn of Africa", HC 297.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's observations are being laid before Parliament today.

PRIME MINISTER

Singapore (Air Services)

Q47. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if, when she visits Singapore at the end of the month, she will discuss with the Singapore authorities air services between the United Kingdom and Singapore.

The Prime Minister: I do not propose to raise air services during my visit to Singapore. United Kingdom and Singapore civil aviation officials are reviewing air links between our two countries and will be meeting later in the year.

Parliamentary Questions

Q117. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy, and if she will issue instructions to Ministers accordingly, that, when replying to parliamentary questions to the effect that it would not be appropriate to give the information requested or that it is not the practice to do so, they should give the reasons or the policy considerations which underlie such an answer; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Hollingbourne

Q139. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Hollingbourne.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

UNITA

Q151. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the UNITA organisation in Angola.

The Prime Minister: We have received representations advocating and opposing contact between Her Majesty's Government and UNITA.

European Community Commission

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the Chairman of the European Community Commission.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

EC (Sovereignty Transfer)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the recent speech by the President of the Commission about the likely transfer of sovereignty from national Government to the Community; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The President of the Commission gave an expression of opinion with which I fundamentally disagree.

Consultation Documents

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will request all Ministers who issue consultation documents to state prominently on the first page thereof the closing date for responses, and to whom responses should be sent.

The Prime Minister: It is already the practice to state clearly the closing date for responses to consultation documents and to indicate to whom responses should be sent. I will draw my hon. Friend's point to the attention of Ministers.

Productivity Statistics

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister what definition the Central Statistical Office uses of the employed labour force for the purposes of calculating productivity statistics; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: For the purposes of calculating productivity statistics the Central Statistical Office uses a definition of the employed labour force as the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces.

Engagements

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters she has received (a) opposing and (b) supporting privatisation of the National Engineering Laboratory, East Kilbride; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: To date I have received over 1,800 letters almost all pre-printed and written in identical terms opposing privatisation.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total spending by her office on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

The Prime Minister: My office did not incur any expenditure on advertising in 1987-88. Total expenditure by 10 Downing street on press and public relations in 1987-88 is estimated at £341,526.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Cabinet Office on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office does not expect to incur any expenditure on promotional advertising on television, radio or in newspapers in 1988-89. The latest estimate of expenditure on other promotional material in 1988-89 by the Cabinet Office, including the Central Statistical Office and the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service, as well as on such services provided to the Office of Arts and Libraries, is £9,500.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the Central Statistical Office; and if she will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

The Prime Minister: Information on numbers of staff by grade is not readily available for 1979 and 1984 and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost. The other information requested is as follows:

	Members of Statistician Group[1]	Members of Administration and other groups [2]	Total
1 April 1979	65	190	255
1 April 1984	41	146	187

[1] 1979 and 1984 figures exclude Cadet Statisticians.
[2] Includes all other non statistician group staff.

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of the Cabinet Office.

The Prime Minister: Seventeen staff are presently employed by the Cabinet Office, including the Central Statistical Office, the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service, and 10 Downing street on press and public relations activities.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations offices of her office.

The Prime Minister: Including support staff, eight people are presently employed in 10 Downing street on press and public relations activities.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by the Cabinet Office on press and public relations during 1988-89.

The Prime Minister: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The latest estimate of expenditure on press and public relations in 1988-89 by the Cabinet Office, including 10 Downing street, the Central Statistical Office and the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service, as well as on such services provided to the Office of Arts and Libraries, is £525,000.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Entry Clearance Charges

70. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the recent increase in entry clearance charges to £60 per applicant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Letters on this matter have been received from 11 colleagues. The reason why the settlement and long-term entry clearance fee had to be increased at this time was given in the replies to the questions asked by the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 21 June at columns 517-18.

Malaysia

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he will be making to the Government of Malaysia, regarding the continued detention without trial of 42 citizens of that country.

Mr. Mellor: We shall continue to monitor the Internal Security Act detentions closely, in consultation with our European partners. Representatives of the Twelve have already discussed the matter with the Malaysian authorities and have made known our collective concerns. We shall ensure that the Malaysian authorities remain aware of those concerns. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the question of the detentions during his visit to Malaysia in April.

Live Monkey Brains

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take the necessary steps to prohibit the consumption of live monkey brains in Hong Kong restaurants.

Mr. Mellor: The consumption of live monkey brains in Hong Kong restaurants is already prohibited. Hong Kong's Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Ordinance makes acts of cruelty to animals illegal and provides powers to arrest offenders. The Animals and Plants (Protection of Endangered Species) Ordinance, which gives effect to CITES, controls inter alia the import and possession of endangered species including all species of monkey.

The Hong Kong Government have no evidence of the consumption of live monkey brains in Hong Kong restaurants. Any reports would be investigated vigorously.

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88;

(2) what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Mellor: I refer to the written answer of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 17 December 1987 at columns 629-30. Final outturns for 1987-88 are not yet available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Mellor: The number of staff employed in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office news department and Overseas Development Administration press office is 19.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Mellor: Latest Foreign and Commonwealth Office estimates of expenditure on advertising and other promotional material for the year 1988-89 are:

Foreign and Commonwealth Office Diplomatic Wing	280,000
Foreign and Commonwealth Office Overseas Development Administration Wing	352,000
	632,000

This expenditure relates mainly to advertising for recruitment; publicity to promote the entitlement of certain British residents overseas to vote in British and European Parliament elections; consular advice for Britons travelling abroad; and general material. A disaggregation of these figures to identify the medium to be used is not available.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the annual budget provided by the Welsh Office to the Welsh Housing Associations Council.

Mr. Grist: In the current financial year the Welsh Office will provide the Welsh Housing Associations Council with grant in aid of £10,000 to support the council's administrative costs. In addition the Department will provide £30,000 specifically to support a co-operative development officer.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines exist (a) to direct and (b) to verify the expenditure of the Welsh Housing Associations Council.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Housing Associations Council is an independent body which exists to represent the housing association movement in Wales. It also carries out training and research on a collective basis. Although the Department provides financial support towards the council's administrative costs, we do not consider it appropriate to attach conditions to that support which would inhibit the council's independence.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision is made by the Welsh Housing Associations Council to offer hospitality to potential tenants, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh Housing Associations Council.

Waste Disposal

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what information he has as to how many local authorities in Wales which are responsible for domestic waste disposal services separate such domestic waste into (a) glass, (b) metal, (c) plastic and (d) papers for recycling purposes;

(2) what information he has as to what proportion of the total number of local authorities responsible for domestic waste disposal in Wales separate all or part of their domestic waste into different categories for recycling purposes.

Mr. Grist: Of the 37 waste disposal authorities in Wales, a total of 25 are involved in recycling activities as follows:

	Number of local authorities
Glass	25
Metal	4
Plastic	Nil
Paper	13

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of hospital waiting lists by area and specialty for each year since 1974 to date.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the Welsh Office publications "Bed Use Statistics", copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision is made in the rate support grant for (a) the cost in 1989-90 of introducing the Education Reform Bill and (b) the cost in 1989-90 of preparing for the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Grist: Rate support grant paid in support of local authority services generally is not hypothecated to particular services or initiatives.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) which of the projects in his Valleys initiative announced on 5 July had not been previously announced; and what is the value of Government funding for them;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a schedule of all the items in his Valleys initiative, giving the original date of announcement of each project and of each extension to a project, with the relevant level of Government spending associated with each stage of the announcements;

(3) which of the projects listed in his Valleys initiative had been announced (a) before June 1987, (b) between June 1987 and 31 December 1987 and (c) between 1 January 1988 and 31 March 1988; and what was the total value of Government funding for the projects initiated in each date band.

Mr. Peter Walker: Programmes and projects involving new or enhanced action are listed in the "Action not Words" chapter of the document "The Valleys: A Programme for the People" published on 14 June 1988. Copies are available in the Library of the House. Of the items listed only the increased level of Welsh Development Agency factory provision had been the subject of a previous announcement. The agency announced on 30 March 1988 that it intended to start building or designing an extra 1 million sq ft of factory space in 1988-89. This subsumed some of the factory building which forms part of the valleys programme.

Where it is feasible to do so, public expenditure costs of the individual projects and programmes mentioned are given in the document. In other cases expenditure will depend in part on the number and nature of projects which come forward.

Expenditure on key programmes affecting economic development, environmental improvement and urban renewal is expected to exceed £500 million over the three years of the valleys programme.

Health Authorities (Staff)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each area health authority the number of whole-time employed staff and number of hours worked of (a) hospital nurses, (b) midwives, (c) health visitors, (d) district nurses, (e) ancillary staff, (f) ambulance personnel and (g) administrative and clerical staff for each year since 1974 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: The information available is given in the table. Staff-in-post figures are derived primarily for NHS payroll records and a break down for nursing and midwifery into the requested categories (a) to (d) is not considered to be sufficiently reliable. Information prior to 1977 is not available by district on a comparable basis to that shown in the table:

[3] Ambulance personnel includes ambulancemen/women, ambulance officers and control assistants.

Slurry Tank (Ciliau Moor Common)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether those organisations consulted on the siting of a slurry tank on Ciliau moor common were in favour of the proposal.

Mr. Grist: The Open Spaces Society was not in favour of the proposal and the Countryside Commission had no comments to offer.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from organisations, other than those consulted, concerning the siting of a slurry tank on Ciliau moor common.

Mr. Grist: Representation was received from the West Wales Trust for Nature Conservation, Pembrokeshire Coast national park authority, Nature Conservancy Council, Welsh water authority, Ramblers' Association and the National Farmers' Union as well as representation from the National Trust in support of its application.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Walker: The total expenditure on press and public relations and advertising in 1987-88 was £1,057,841·52. This figure includes expenditure on salaries and accommodation for all the information grades and support staff.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: The total estimated expenditure on press and public relations in 1988-89 is £1,198,000. This figure includes expenditure on salaries and accommodation for all the information grades and support staff.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Peter Walker: For 1988-89 the total estimated expenditure on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material is £710,500.

Statistical Division

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical division in his Department; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of staff in post in my economic and statistical services division on 1 July this year and at the same date in 1979 and 1984 were as follows:

	1 July 1979		1 July 1984		1 July 1988

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: At 1 July 1988, a total of 20 full-time and one part-time.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each local authority in Wales the revised illustrative figures for 1988-89 of the first year safety netted community charge, the full community charge and the current average rate bill per adult and per household.

Mr. Grist: Illustrative community charge figures for each district and county council in Wales, with no allowance for transitional arrangements, are shown as follows in table 1. The district council figures include the average community council community charge. The figures are based on present needs assessments which are under review.

It is presently proposed to apply the safety net at charging authority area level and not to individual tiers. On this basis safety netted community charges for each area together with the average rate bills per adult and per household are given in table 2. Households are defined, for this purpose, as domestic hereditaments.

Unfit Dwellings

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of dwellings identified as unfit in the Welsh housing condition survey in 1979 and 1988 in each local authority area together with the percentage of the total housing stock in each local authority area that these figures represent and the percentage each local authority figure represents as a percentage of all unfit dwellings in Wales.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 18 July 1988]: This information is only available for 1981 and 1986 when house condition surveys were carried out. The data requested, at county level only in 1981 and for each local authority area in 1986, are given in the table:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Order Offences

11. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that justice is dispensed swiftly to those charged with public order offences.

32. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to make sure that justice is dispensed swiftly to those charged with public order offences; and if he will make a statement.

48. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that those accused of public order offences are brought before magistrates within three days.

Mr. John Patten: We are consulting the services working in the magistrates' courts in order to develop a framework for local arrangements to provide swift justice, and I hope to announce further details soon.

Elections (Voting)

12. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make proposals to amend the law allowing British citizens resident abroad to vote in general and European elections.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend said on 29 April, at columns 285-86, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown), we intend to bring forward legislation to extend the eligibility of British citizens living overseas to register as electors in this country during this Parliament.

Prison Officers (House Sales)

13. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much prison officers' accommodation has so far been sold to prison officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 12 July, 423 properties had been sold to staff under the prison service discount sale of quarters scheme.

Magistrates' Courts (Clerks)

14. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to alleviate the shortage of magistrates' court clerks in the area covered by the clerk to the justices of Mansfield, Worksop, East Retford, Newark and Southwell magistrates' courts.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the joint negotiating committee (JNC) for magistrates' courts staff will take into account information on recruitment and retention when considering the pay settlement for 1988. We shall consider very carefully whatever proposals the JNC puts forward.

51. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the training of juvenile court magistrates' clerks.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to her question on 18 April. Action is being taken to recruit staff to the new Home Office unit mentioned in that reply.

Licensing Act 1988

15. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to bring into effect the Licensing Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

17. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what day the Licensing Act 1988 will come into force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard.)

Police (Assaults)

16. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the incidence of attacks on police officers in the north-west.

53. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of assaults on police officers in Welsh police authority areas.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of police officers assaulted in the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of and fully share the concern of the police service over the increasing frequency of assaults. There is no central record of cases which might be defined as assaults on the police. Different forces keep local records in different ways. For example, in Greater Manchester the number of assaults and consequent days lost through sickness has been monitored only since 1 July 1987. Between then and the end of 1987, 337 officers were assaulted on duty and 3,422 man-days lost as a result. My right hon. Friend has asked Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary to collect information on assaults on the police on a consistent basis and to publish this information in future annual reports.

Prison Officers

18. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will examine the current procedures for enabling prison officers to serve in prison establishments of their choice.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The overriding need is to provide sufficient staff at all establishments. Subject to that, every effort is made to enable prison officers to serve in the establishment of their choice. In the 12 months up to June 1988, 1,414 experienced officers were given transfers in accordance with their wishes. Of the 857 officers who have joined the service since March 1988, 539 were posted to an establishment of their choice or to one in the immediate area.

Firearms

19. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted for firearms offences in England and Wales during the current year to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were 2,820 convictions under the Firearms Act 1968 in 1986, the latest year for which information is available. These were for various offences of non-compliance with the law on the possession and use of firearms. With regard to the use of firearms in crime, in 1987 the police recorded 9,000 notifiable offences in which firearms were reported to have been used. Details are available in Home Office statistical bulletin 19/1988, a copy of which is in the Library.

Sunday Trading

20. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any further representations relating to the reform of the Sunday trading legislation.

Mr. Renton: Since I last answered a question on this subject, from my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 23 June at column 1253, we have received 12 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and 101 against.

Kirkholt Project, Rochdale

21. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the Kirkholt project, Rochdale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: On 6 June the Home Office crime prevention unit published a report describing the first phase of a project aimed at reducing burglary on the Kirkholt estate, Rochdale. The project was carried out with the support of the Greater Manchester police and probation services and has been evaluated by staff of the university of Manchester. Following the construction of a crime profile of the estate, which contains approximately 2,000 dwellings, a preventive programme was developed and implemented in the spring of 1987. The programme involved "cocoon" neighbourhood watch schemes based on victims and their immediate neighbours; the removal of pre-payment coin meters, wherever possible; and the provision of security advice and hardware. An evaluation of the effect of the work after seven months showed a 60 per cent. reduction in domestic burglary and an 80 per cent. reduction in the number of people becoming the victim of crime on more than one occasion. Figures obtained since then show that the success of the scheme has been maintained and there are no signs of crime being displaced to other estates or to other types of offence.

Rape

22. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the rate of recidivism among those sentenced for rape.

Mr. John Patten: I regret that this information is not available, but a study made a few years ago suggested that less than 5 per cent. of men imprisoned for all sexual offences, not just rape, were convicted again of a sexual offence within two years of their release.

British Broadcasting Corporation

23. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is planning any meetings with the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation to discuss the financing of the corporation.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman from time to time to discuss a wide range of matters of current interest. The BBC's recently published mid-year review, copies of which are in the Library, explains how the BBC is meeting the challenge of the indexed licence fee.

Guildford and Woolwich Bombing Cases

24. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to announce the publication of his review of the Guildford and Woolwich bombing cases.

26. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to announce the outcome of his review of the Guildford and Woolwich bombing cases.

46. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to announce the outcome of his review of the Guildford and Woolwich bombing cases.

Mr. John Patten: I refer to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Wall).

Broadcasting

25. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the report of the Home Affairs Select Committee on broadcasting.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations on the report of the Home Affairs Select Committee on the future of broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: We have not received any representation about the report. I welcome it as an interesting and challenging contribution to the debate about the future of broadcasting.

Alcohol Control

27. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take further measures to control the availability of alcohol, following recent alcohol-related incidents of violence in the south of England.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe that the licensing legislation provides sufficient powers to control the sale of alcohol. We are taking the opinion of magistrates, police and the industry on this point. In a forthcoming circular to the police and magistrates, we shall remind them of the powers available to prevent and deal with alcohol-related disorder and urge them to consider their greater use.

30. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the minimum legal age for the purchase of alcohol.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have at present no plans to do so.

33. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the evidence of illegal sales from off-licences of alcohol to minors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available for this purpose does not distinguish between different types of licensed premises. The following information relates to 1986:

	Prosecutions	Convictions	Cautions
Offences under section 169(1)	296	165	246
Offences under section 169(2)	949	885	1,429

The Licensing Act 1988 contains provisions to strengthen the law on the sale of alcohol to young people and to require sales in off-licensed premises by staff under the age of 18 to be effectively supervised. These new measures will come into force on 1 August.

68. Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to make the consumption of alcohol on the pavements, roadways and public areas of sports grounds illegal.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol etc) Act 1985 established controls on the possession of alcohol on entry to and within designated football grounds. The existing criminal law provides a range of remedies to penalise drunkenness, disorderliness and other misbehaviour frequently associated with heavy drinking. My right hon. Friend has agreed to an experimental bye-law in Coventry which will make it an offence to consume alcohol in designated streets and other public places. The pilot project will run for two years, and will be carefully evaluated by the Home Office and the participating authority.

Immigration Act 1988

28. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to seek to repeal section 1 of the Immigration Act 1988.

Mr. Renton: No.

61. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to bring into effect section 1 of the Immigration Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: By virtue of the Immigration Act 1988 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1988, made on 1 July, sections 1 to 5 of the Act will come into force on 1 August.

Driving Offences (Statistics)

29. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in England and Wales were prosecuted in 1987 for driving vehicles without (a) MOT certificates and (b) tax discs.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available figures related to 1986 when there were 187,000 proceedings at magistrates' courts for vehicle test certificate offences and 182,000 for failure to pay the appropriate motor vehicle licence duty. There were also 15,700 proceedings for offences of a motor vehicle licence being obscured or not affixed. The available information is published annually in table 5 of "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", copies of which are in the Library. Figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

Remanded Persons

31. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any physically, sensory or mentally impaired people are being held in remand centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 30 March 1988, the most recent date for which information is available, one prisoner suffering from mental impairment considered by a medical officer to meet the criteria for detention in hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983 was being held in a remand centre.

Information about numbers of physically or sensorily impaired prisoners is not collected centrally.

Identity Cards

34. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the introduction of a British identity card.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received a steady flow of correspondence and comments from right hon. and hon. Members and the public on the introduction of national identity cards. We shall continue to consider the views which are put to us on this matter, but, at present, we remain to be persuaded that there is a sufficiently strong case for reintroducing compulsory identity cards.

Prisoners (North Sea)

35. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to study the feasibility of accommodating prisoners on purpose-built platforms in the North sea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Traffic Congestion (London)

36. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has recently discussed traffic congestion with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend met the Commissioner on 11 April to discuss a range of matters including the enforcement of road traffic law. Regular discussions also take place between the Metropolitan police and the highway authorities in London, including the Department of Transport, about traffic issues.

Special Constables

37. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of special constables at weekends to police rural towns and villages.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The special constabulary is the main police reserve, which gives frequent and welcome support to the regular police service.

Deployment of the special constabulary throughout England and Wales is a matter for individual chief officers. Special constables are deployed at weekends to assist with such occasions as local carnivals and fetes; to assist with local crime prevention initiatives; and to support the regular police in a wide range of policing tasks.

It is common practice for the special constabulary to support regular officers at weekends in policing rural towns and villages, although specific figures for deployments are not held centrally.

Prisons

38. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on conditions in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government's reply to the Third Report from the Home Affairs Committee (Cm. 263), published in December 1987, described the conditions of the prison system in England and Wales. Since then the prison population has fluctuated, but now stands at 49,963 of which 690 are in police cells. Work continues on the implementation of the package of place-producing measures which my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 30 March at columns 1083-85. In addition, the major changes in staff working practices known as fresh start are in place, or a date has been set for implementation, in all prison service establishments.

55. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons to investigate the desirability of removing Crown immunity from prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are satisfied that the present arrangements are effective in setting and monitoring the standards required by legislation.

Firearms (Amendment) Bill

39. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further changes he will propose to the Firearms (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Government amendments to the Bill agreed in another place this week provide:

(i) a power to prohibit by order any firearm which, by reason of the material of which it is composed, appears to the Secretary of State to be not readily detectable by apparatus for detecting metal objects;

(ii) an exception from the effects of clause 7(2) to provide for the case in which the barrel of a rifle is temporarily shortened by a registered firearms dealer for the purpose of substituting a replacement barrel which is smooth-bored;

(iii) for the payment of expenses to members of the firearms consultative committee; and

(iv) for commencement orders to contain transitional provisions, where necessary.

We have also accepted proposed changes to the terms of reference to the firearms consultative committee and undertaken to consider some minor changes concerning the forfeiture of firearms on revocation of licences; arrangements for the use of rifles under the supervision of estate owners; the extension of the buy-in scheme to cover converted prohibited weapons; and the validity of visitors' permits.

Alcohol Abuse

40. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he intends to take to help to prevent alcohol abuse.

49. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to curb alcohol abuse.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he intends to give to help tackle at local level the problem of alcohol abuse as a means towards reducing the level of violent crime among young people.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are encouraging more rigorous enforcement of the licensing laws, including new provisions to help prevent under-age drinking. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is meeting representatives of the magistrates (with the Lord Chancellor) and of brewers, licensees, the retail trade and the entertainments industry (with the Lord President) to discuss the measures they can take. Discussions are also taking place with chief officers of police. Guidance will be issued to the police and courts on the powers available to deal with and prevent breaches of the licensing laws and with disorder as a result of heavy drinking. The ministerial group on alcohol misuse is co-ordinating further preventive and educational measures, including guidance on good practice in tackling local problems.

Auto Crime

41. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further measures his Department is taking to help prevent car crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) and for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 23 June 1988 at columns 680-81.

60. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had on the measures his Department is taking to seek to prevent car crime.

Mr. John Patten: Car crime accounts for approximately a quarter of all recorded crime, much of it preventable. We receive a steady flow of correspondence and comments from hon. Members and the public about the measures that can be taken to prevent it.

The Home Office standing conference on crime prevention has set up a working group on car crime which will report in December. The Rover Group, which is represented on the working group, is working on a theft-proof concept car, incorporating a range of the latest technology in car security, which will be displayed at this year's standing conference in December.

Five parts of a British standard on vehicle security (mechanical locking systems, security of in-car entertainment equipment, window etching, central power locking and deadlocking) have now been published and work is continuing on the final part, dealing with security glazing. Steps are being taken to have the British standard adopted as an EC directive.

Our new crime prevention publicity campaign, launched in March, includes information on car crime and the scope for preventing it.

In 1987 the number of offences of theft or taking of a motor vehicle recorded by the police in England and Wales fell by 5·2 per cent. compared to 1986. It is encouraging that this reduction coincided with measures taken by the Home Office and by police forces throughout the country with the specific aim of reducing car crime.

Community Service

42. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the record to date of employing offenders on community service in crime prevention initiatives in north-west England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Offenders on community service orders work on a variety of crime prevention projects. Recent examples from north-west England include: erecting fencing for elderly people and other vulnerable members of the community (Bolton and Wigan), distributing leaflets about local crime prevention initiatives (Manchester), making interior flaps to secure household letterboxes (Liverpool), and decorating and preparing a workshop for the production of security grills for doors and windows (Oldham). The probation service also has close links with local victim support schemes and community service workers have been used to make good the damage and to secure premises after a break-in. This aspect of community service work has not been assessed centrally, but we are keen to encourage area probation services to undertake more projects of this kind.

Crime Rates

43. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what he attributes the fall in recorded crime in London, Greater Manchester, Merseyside and West Midlands during the 12 months ended 31 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Ninety-four per cent. of all recorded crime is against property. All these areas recorded decreases of between 4 and 13 per cent. in the number of burglaries. This suggests that crime can be reduced when effective targeting by the policy is combined with sensible crime prevention by members of the public and businesses.

Video Recordings Act 1984

44. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the working of the Video Recordings Act 1984, with a view to banning computer games which encourage football hooliganism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Video Recordings Act already applies to any video game which to any significant extent depicts acts of gross violence or to any extent stimulates or encourages such acts. It is an offence to supply such a game unless it has been classified by the British Board of Film Classification or, if it has been classified, to supply it other than to a person in the age group for which it is classified as suitable.

Metropolitan Police

47. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives have been taken by the Metropolitan police force to improve its value for money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A continuing theme in the Commissioner's strategy for 1988 is to seek improvements in effectiveness, efficiency and the economic use of Metropolitan police resources and to ensure best value for money. Changes have been made this year to the systems of estimating, monitoring and controlling expenditure and to the composition of the cash limit in order to strengthen the controls in running costs and other current expenditure. The estimate screening process has also been streamlined to enable the screening board to concentrate its attention on the relative priorities of competing demands, increasing value for money in the use of resources and identifying policies or projects which require more detailed examination. The existing priority programme on financial management will concentrate this year on the improvement of financial management information and the development of a pilot scheme to assess the effectiveness of divisional budgets. Independent inspections by Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary will augment the work of the internal system of inspections in measuring the efficiency of the force.

Other initiatives aimed at improving value for money include a programme of scrutinies and efficiency reviews, contracting out of services and the wider use of output measures and performance indicators.

Recent achievements include:

(a) a reduction of nearly 350 posts at headquarters;
(b) an increase of over 750 in the number of officers on areas;
(c) more than 400 additional police constables on divisions;
(d) an increase of 13 per cent. in the hours spent on street duty by police constables;
(e) a reduction of about 6 per cent. in the overtime budget for 1988-89;
(f) about 200 police officers released for operational duty through civilianisation; and
(g) a 6 per cent. improvement in arrest rates.

52. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he is giving to increasing the current level of police manpower within the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In March my right hon. Friend authorised an increase of 300 police officers for the Metropolitan police bringing the establishment to 28,115. The force hopes to reach full establishment later this year. An increase was also authorised of 50 civilian staff who will be used to release police officers for operational duties.

The programme of manpower increases which was announced in May 1986 also allows for further increases of 300 police officers and 150 civilians next year, subject to my right hon. Friend being satisfied that the earlier increases have been used effectively.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

50. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement about the number and progress of neighbourhood watch schemes with particular reference to the Metropolitan police area.

57. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he can report on the number of neighbourhood watch schemes presently in operation and their effect on crime in the areas they cover.

Mr. John Patten: There are now over 50,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales with more than 8,800 in the Metropolitan police area alone. An estimated 3 million households nationally are involved. The growth of neighbourhood watch schemes reflects a growing recognition by concerned members of the community that they are not powerless against crime and that much can be achieved when the community gives active support to its police force. It is not possible to be certain about the precise effects of watch schemes on crime figures, but I very much welcome the fact that as the number of neighbourhood watch schemes has increased there has been a welcome decrease in burglaries in dwellings—down about five per cent. in the Metropolitan police area and 4·5 per cent. in England and Wales as a whole.

Police (Jury Protection)

54. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many police officers are employed on jury protection duties at the Old Bailey on a normal working day.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that officers are deployed on Jury protection duties only as and when the need arises, so that it is not possible to provide an estimate of the numbers so deployed on a normal working day. When Jury protection is provided I understand that it requires 72 officers to cover each 24-hour period.

Police Cells (Prisoners)

56. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made since his statement of 30 March in reducing the number of prisoners held in police cells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry).

Sunday Sport

58. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought over the past 10 years against sporting bodies for contravention of the law by allowing participation and spectators on a Sunday.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 19 May at column 532.

Fresh Start

59. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the implementation of the fresh start proposals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Fresh start has been implemented at all establishments except Chelmsford, where local discussions are taking place with the aim of implementing in mid-August. Work is not yet complete on updating the efficiency gain.

Child Abuse

62. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of child sexual and physical abuse were reported to his Department from South Yorkshire in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for five years previously.

Mr. John Patten: The information available is given in the table and relates to the number of persons convicted of those offences of violence against the person and sexual offences where the nature of the offence was such that the victim was necessarily aged 16 or under. For other offences of those types the number of victims aged 16 or under is not known.

Persons found guilty of certain offences where the victim is known to be aged 16 or under: South Yorkshire

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Violence against the person[1]	7	6	1	2	2
Sexual offences[2]	85	91	83	83	87
Total	92	97	84	85	89

[1] Murder of infant under one year of age, infanticide and cruelty to a child.

[2] Buggery with a boy under the age of 16 or with a woman or an animal, attempt to commit buggery with a boy under the age of 16 or with a woman or an animal, indecent assault on a male person under 16, indecent assault on a female person under 16, unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 13, unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 16, incest with a girl under 13, inciting a girl under 16 to have incestuous sexual intercourse, householder permitting unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 16, person responsible for girl under 16 causing or encouraging her prostitution etc, abduction of an unmarried girl under 16 and gross indecency with children.

Solvent Abuse

63. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policies on solvent abuse.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has the lead in co-ordinating Government policies on solvent misuse, which are directed primarily towards education and prevention. This Department's main responsibility in this area is for the application of the criminal law through the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985, which makes it an offence for a person to supply or offer a substance to someone under the age of 18 if he knows or has reasonable cause to believe that it is likely to be inhaled for the purpose of causing intoxication.

Pensioners

64. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met leaders of the National Pensioners Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I met a delegation from the National Federation of Retirement Pensioners Associations (Pensioners' Voice) on 9 May. This was an opportunity for a useful exchange of views on matters of concern to the elderly.

Territorial Support Groups

65. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to expand the operations of the territorial support group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he has no plans to expand the operations of the territorial support groups. The groups will continue to play a valuable role in dealing with major incidents, and in providing divisions with additional manpower to tackle high priority crimes.

Wheel Clamping

66. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has recently issued on the application of wheel clamping in the Metropolitan police area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. However, I understand that the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis issued revised force instructions on 1 July 1987 and introduced revised training courses in the same month. Both emphasise the need for police officers authorising clamping to do so with discretion, common sense, and good judgment.

Violent Crime

67. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals were convicted of violent crime during 1987; and what was the equivalent figure 10 years earlier.

Mr. John Patten: In 1987, 47,900 persons were convicted of offences of violence against the person, 6,200 of sexual offences and 4,400 of robbery. Corresponding figures for the previous 10 years can be found in table 5.8 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1986" (Cm. 233), copies of which are in the Library.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about his proposals to alter section 2 of the Official Secrets Act since his statement to the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received very few representations on the proposals set out in our White Paper.

Prisons (Members' Visits)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of the number of visits undertaken by hon. Members to high security prisons since 1979 where their research assistants have been refused permission to accompany them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Research assistants are not permitted to accompany hon. Members visiting prisons, of whatever security category, unless the responsible Minister is satisfied that exceptional circumstances apply. Records of such applications are not routinely kept.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mr. Hurd: In 1987-88 the full cost of staff and other costs of Home Office press office was £525,000; for Home Office publicity section the cost was £306,000; the cost of advertising was £4,837,000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) TV advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Hurd: It is estimated that Home Office spending during 1988-89 will be as follows:

TV advertising	2,600,000
Radio advertising	100,000
Newspaper (including magazine advertising)	2,890,000
Other promotional activity (including printing, film/video, TV fillers, displays, exhibitions and market research)	3,680,000

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in his Department; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

Mr. Hurd: The information requested is given in the table. These figures are narrower in coverage than those given in the White Paper on Government statistical services published in 1981 (Cmnd. 8236, page 4) which included some staff in other parts of the Home Office working on statistical projects. Also, since 1981 the responsibilities of the statistical department have been expanded and changed and the staff complement changed in consequence.

Number

Grade	1979	1984	1988
Statistical posts
Grade 5	3	3	3
Grade 7	13	16	18·5
Assistant/Senior Assistant Statistician	8	7	7
	24	26	28·5
Other posts
Senior Executive Officer	4	2	1
Higher Executive Officer	9	10	11
Executive Officer	18	21	25
Administrative Officer	69	67	57·5
Administrative Assistant	21	35	40·5
Other grades	11	10	10·5
	132	145	145·5
Total	156	171	174

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Hurd: There are at present 18 press officers and four supporting staff employed in the Home Office press office.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Hurd: The full cost of staff and other costs of the Home Office press office are estimated at £615,000 in 1988-89.

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors prevented the implementation of circular instruction 3/1978 at Risley remand centre during 1987; and what steps have been taken to ensure that future Home Office circular instructions will be fully implemented at Risley remand centre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This was essentially a management failure exacerbated by local staffing and training difficulties.

The present governor is fully aware of his responsibility for implementing departmental instructions and the regional office will monitor their implementation in the normal course of management.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any new appointment has been made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. Peter W. Moorhouse has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the authority. He will take up his post on 25 July.

This appointment is being made to fill one of the vacancies created by the expiry of the terms of appointment of two authority members on 28 April. I hope to announce the further appointment shortly.

Unpaid Fines

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for each of the nine inner London petty sessional divisions, how many cases of unpaid fines still await collection; and at what time point unpaid fines are written off as uncollectable.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1988, c. 222]: At 30 June 1988, the position was as follows:

	Number
South Westminster	14,107
North Westminster	10,958
West London	10,005
West Central	11,005
East Central	14,807
Thames	5,031
South Western	15,211
South Central	21,630
South Eastern	10,089

In addition, there were 520 cases of unpaid fines at the inner London juvenile court, and 220,882 cases of unpaid fixed penalty fines at the central processing unit. An unidentifiable number of these cases consist of fines in which the time allowed for payment has not expired. Fines are written off only after all appropriate enforcement action has been taken. There is no set time limit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Privy Council Office on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

(a), (b), and (d) Nil.

(c) None, other than an estimated £3,000 on items published in the official gazettes.

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of the Privy Council Office.

Mr. Wakeham: Nil.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by the Privy Council Office on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Wakeham: Approximately £1,250.

European Legislation

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many proposals or other documents declared by the Select Committee on European Legislation to be of sufficient legal or political importance to be reported to the House have not yet been debated; and if he will publish a table showing the dates on which the decisions were made by the Select Committee and the nature of the issues concerned.

Mr. Wakeham: Ninety-three documents recommended by the Select Committee on European Legislation for further consideration by the House have not yet been debated. Details have been placed in the Library of the House. Of these 93 documents, 38 are not at present under active consideration in the Community and 11 are awaiting further documents so that Parliament can have the opportunity to debate the up-to-date position. Of the remaining 44 documents several have been linked by the Select Committee and it is expected that, in accordance with the Committee's recommendations, these would require no more than 24 debates. Four of these debates, covering seven documents, have been arranged for next week.

South African Wines

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council if, pursuant to his answer of 18 July, he will set out in full the approved procedures followed to remedy the situation and prevent further contravention of the rules regarding the use of the facilities of the House by an hon. Member for the stocking and sale of wines from South Africa.

Mr. Wakeham: Under the rules governing use of House of Commons stationery, the approved procedures invoked in such cases require financial reimbursement by the individual concerned of the cost of the stationery and any post-paid envelopes used, together with a written undertaking to respect the rules in future. There are no rules governing commercial transactions or storage of items in Members' rooms. These are matters for the individual concerned.

PARLIAMENTARY PRESS GALLERY

Mr. Dobson: To ask (1) the Lord President of the Council how many press officers from his office have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(2) the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many press officers from the Department of Trade and Industry have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(3) the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many press officers from the Duchy office have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(4) the Secretary of State for Defence how many press officers from the armed forces have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(5) the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(6) the Secretary of State for Wales how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(7) the Secretary of State for Scotland how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(8) the Secretary of State for Transport how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(9) the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(10) the Secretary of State for Employment how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(11) the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many press officers from the Duchy office and the Department of Trade and Industry, respectively, have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(12) the Attorney-General how many press officers from the Law Officers' Department and that of the Lord Chancellor have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(13) the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(14) the Prime Minister how many press officers from her office have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(15) the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(16) the Secretary of State for Defence how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(17) the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(18) the Secretary of State for Energy how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(19) the Secretary of State for the Environment how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(20) the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery;

(21) the Secretary of State for Social Services how many press officers from his Department have passes giving them access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

A total of six press officers, from the Prime Minister's Office, the Central Office of Information, the Home Office and the Ministry of Defence have access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery on a permanent basis. All Departments, other than the Law Officers' Department, the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Duchy Office and the Privy Council Office, have press officers who apply on a day-to-day basis for a pass to admit them to the Parliamentary Press Gallery when their official duties require it. The total of such press officers is 156. No officials from the Law Officers' Department, the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Duchy Office or the Privy Council Office have access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Amstrad Computers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report the British content of Amstrad computers measured on the standard used by the European Economic Community for imposing anti-dumping duties on screwdriver-assembled products; and what are the differences in the standard for this computer as set by each European Economic Comunity country.

Mr. Alan Clark: The sourcing of Amstrad's computers is a matter for the company. As there are no anti-dumping duties on computers, the criteria used by the Commission of the European Communities to assess whether assembly operations are designed to circumvent such duties are not relevant. Computers must comply with the national safety standards set by EC member states which differ from each other to varying degrees.

Manufacturing

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the quality of statistics compiled by his Department on trends in the manufacturing industry; and what plans he has to improve the comprehensiveness and accuracy of those statistics.

Mr. Atkins: To complement the recently announced central review of Government economic statistics, we have established a review of the DTI's business surveys. Both reviews include an examination of the statistics for manufacturing industry, and will make recommendations for changes where this is thought necessary. The departmental review will look in particular at the balance between the burdens that DTI surveys impose on industry and the quality and value of the resulting statistics. This follows comments which my Department receives from time to time on both aspects of the problem.

STRIDE Programme

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress made to implement the European Commission's proposed STRIDE programme; and if he is now able to list the regions of the United Kingdom which are expected to benefit from this programme.

Mr. Atkins: We continue to await proposals for this programme from the European Commission.

Rover Group

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date he was first told of Rover's intention to reduce the work force at Cowley and Llanelli; whether that information is contained in the 1988 corporate plan; and whether he will now place a copy of that plan in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I was aware before the opening of negotiations with British Aerospace for the Government's shareholding in Rover Group that there was a prospect of work force and capacity reductions at Cowley and Llanelli. Details of Rover's plans for industrial facilities have always been treated as commercially confidential. I do not intend to place a copy of the 1988 plan in the Library of the House.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement setting out the nature and extent of the controls available to the EEC Commission over the future plans for Rover Group in consequence of the recent discussions in Brussels.

Mr. Kenneth Clark: The Commission will monitor the implementation of the Rover Group corporate plan on the basis of half-yearly reports on Rover Group's performance provided by the Government. The Commission's interest in the corporate plan is limited to considering whether under certain circumstances, there should be any repayment of state aid as provided by article 93(2) of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the permission of the EEC Commission will be required, in terms of the recent agreement, if British Aerospace adjusts its corporate plan for the Rover Group to increase capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Commission's interest in the corporate plan is limited to considering whether under certain circumstances, there should be any repayment of state aid as provided by article 93(2) of the treaty of Rome. A condition of the Commission's approval for the cash injection into Rover Group was that British Aerospace should follow the investment and restructuring envisaged in the Rover Group management's existing plans for the period 1988 to 1992. In the case of significant departure from those plans it would, as a first step, raise the matter with the Government, in accordance with its established practice, and seek clarification as to the justification for the changes in the light of circumstances at the time.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the aid provided to British Aerospace to purchase the Rover Group was conditional on the capacity reductions in the corporate plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A condition of the Commission's approval for the cash injection into Rover Group was that British Aerospace should follow the investment and restructuring envisaged in the Rover Group management's existing plans for the period 1988 to 1922.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if Commissioner Sutherland required capacity reductions at Rover Group before agreeing to the aid given to British Aerospace; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The EC Commission regard excess capacity in the European vehicle industry as a sensitive matter. The Commission therefore take account of prospective restructuring of a company's facilities when considering cases of proposed state aid to that company. The Government notified to the EC Commission the restructuring of capacity in component manufacturing and vehicle assembly which the Rover Group had undertaken in recent years, and the existing plans of the Rover Group's management for investment and restructuring in the period 1988-1992. On the basis of this information, the Commission decided that the aid proposed was compatible with the Common Market.

Steel-jawed Leghold Traps

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the companies in the United Kingdom which manufacture steel-jawed leghold traps;

(2) if he will list the main countries to which steel-jawed leghold traps, manufactured in the United Kingdom, are presently exported; and what is the total annual value of such trade;

(3) how many steel-jawed leghold traps are manufactured annually in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: As far as is known, steel-jawed leghold traps are not manufactured in the United Kingdom.

"Biotechnology in Focus"

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cash contribution by his Department to the production of "Biotechnology in Focus"; how many copies have been generally distributed; what charge has been made (a) generally and (b) to the Science in Society Intergroup of the EEC assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The DTI's cash contribution was £24,000. A copy was distributed free to all the 8,000 secondary schools in the United Kingdom. None, so far as the Department is aware, have been distributed to the science in society intergroup of the EEC Assembly.

Fertilisers

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals have been advanced by the Commission for restrictions on imports from eastern Europe of nitrogenous fertilisers; what is the purpose of the proposed restrictions; if the issue has been notified by the Commission as falling to be considered by majority vote; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Commission proposal to which my hon. Friend refers would replace existing national measures, under which certain states restrict the import from Eastern Europe of nitrogenous fertilisers, by a single community measure. The quota would be divided into two instalments, the first to be allocated to member states and the second to constitute a reserve. For adoption of this proposal by the Council a qualified majority is needed.

Portugal

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the proposal for financial support, under the European Community budget, for a specific industrial development programme for Portugal.

Mr. Atkins: The European Council in Brussels in February agreed to the provision of 500 mecu (about £340 million) to contribute towards the implementation of a special industrial development programme for Portugal (PEDIP).

The funding, which is distinct from support from the structural funds and Community loans, will last for five years to 1992 and will be used to contribute to financing productive investments and to the improvement of basic infrastructure, industrial efficiency and vocational training.

While supporting the proposal in principle, the Government had to object to one of the proposed legal bases cited for it, namely the use of article 128, which the Commission insisted was necessary to cover the vocational training elements of the programme.

Consideration of the proposal seemed deadlocked on this point, but shortly before the Foreign Affairs Council on 14 June, all other member states joined in objecting to the inclusion of article 128. As a result of this there was no further reason for the United Kingdom to delay adoption of the regulation.

Unfortunately this unexpectedly early agreement to the text of the proposal, which we had otherwise been unable to accept, gave us insufficient time to give early warning to the Select Committee on European Legislation. I therefore wrote to the Chairman of the Committee to explain this unexpected advance and to request that it considers the proposal only at the point when it was likely to be adopted. I would therefore wish to restate my apologies that it had not been possible for the House to undertake and complete scrutiny of the proposal before it was adopted.

International Commodity Agreements

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the Government's policy towards endorsing international commodity agreements; and how this is reflected in United Kingdom policy towards developing countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: Experience with the tin agreement and other commodity agreements has shown that market intervention provisions such as buffer stocks and quota arrangements have severe defects: at best they are of doubtful benefit to producers and consumers and at worst they distort markets fundamentally and carry the risk of disastrous failure. In general, therefore, we are strongly opposed to proposals for new agreements with market intevention provisions and are determined that any renewal of existing ones must be fully justified. Where there are such agreements, our view is that they should be managed under stringent conditions regarding accountability and financing, and operated in conformity with the underlying trends in the market.

The Government's general policy towards commodities is based upon the premise that the best way to assist producers and consumers is to enable markets to work efficiently. We therefore support liberal arrangements and deregulation. We seek to work with our European Community partners to put these principles into practice both in relation to commodity agreements and in the current round of multilateral trade negotiations in GATT which will have an important bearing on wider commodity trade questions of interest to both developed and developing countries.

The Government recognise the economic difficulties of a number of developing countries arising from their heavy dependence on the production of primary commodities. Experience shows that the most effective way of tackling these difficulties is by strengthening and restructuring the economies of the countries concerned. We are contributing to this through our own aid programme and our support for the work of international financial institutions in this field as well as though improving market opportunities for developing countries' goods.

Ironstone Mining

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to whether the British Steel Corporation intends to reinstate the Roxby Gullet opencast ironstone mine to its former state now that mining has ceased.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 July 1988]: I understand that at present the British Steel Corporation is considering various options regarding the future of the area. The British Steel Corporation is not required by the conditions of the original planning permissions to restore the land to its former state. These conditions do, however, require restoration of such levels and configurations as would facilitate natural drainage and permit the resumption of normal agricultural operations. The planning permissions recognise that the last gullet may have to be left open either to facilitate future mining operations or because of the expense of obtaining filling materials. The restoration conditions do not apply to such areas. Apparently the present configuration would need to remain were mining to recommence.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from Glanford borough council on the subject of opencast ironstone mining.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 July 1988]: I am aware of no representations from Glanford borough council on the subject of opencast ironstone mining.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many former ironstone mines the British Steel Corporation either owns or retains the lease of (a) nationally and (b) in the Glanford and Scunthorpe constituency.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 July 1988]: I understand that the British Steel Corporation either owns or retains the lease of 12 former ironstone quarries nationally. The British Steel Corporation owns four former opencast quarries in the Scunthorpe area. Of the remaining eight, six are in Northamptonshire, one in Leicestershire and one in Oxfordshire. Of these eight, the British Steel Corporation owns the mineral rights of two.

Research Establishments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the answers of 14 July and 28 June, Official Report, column 169, why he is unwilling to list the specific organisations consulted in the recent review of his Department's research establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 18 July 1988]: My right hon. and learned Friend explained to the House the conclusions of the review of the Department's research establishments in the answer he gave on 7 June, Official Report, columns 431-32. I do not propose to publish the review in full or give details of the process followed in producing it since it constituted my Department's advice on policy to Ministers.

Electronic Data Interchange

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce electronic data interchange to his Department.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 19 July 1988]: Electronic data interchange is not at present used by the Department for trading purposes, but it will be introduced into selected business areas when legal constraints and legislative considerations have been addressed.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Businesses (Venture Capital)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, Official Report, column 695, what steps he plans to take to encourage venture capital investment in smaller businesses.

Mr. Cope: The Government's economic policies have created a climate in which enterprise is encouraged and rewarded and people are willing to invest in the wide range of opportunities that now exist. There has been significant growth in venture capital investment: from about £110 million in 1982 to £894 million in 1987.

The business expansion scheme facilitates the supply of equity by offering tax relief to individuals investing in unquoted companies. The proposed limit of £500,000 which can be invested per year per company will encourage those who are seeking the tax advantage of BES relief to examine smaller companies and gives a clear indication to investors and advisers that the BES is aimed at providing equity finance for smaller companies.

I will continue to encourage further funds for small firms through my regular contacts with venture capital organisations.

Homeless Persons (Training)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what funds he has made available for each year since 1983 to provide the single homeless with training and employment incentives.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available. Provided they are eligible, single homeless people may participate in employment and training programmes on the same terms as apply generally and may therefore receive training or other allowances in accordance with the terms of each programme.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the United Kingdom have two or more jobs.

Mr. Lee: The regular work force in employment series does not identify persons with two or more jobs.

The labour force survey (LFS) provides information on a different basis but identifies persons with a second job. It is estimated that in spring 1987 there were 853,000 persons in the United Kingdom with a second job.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the number of unemployed in the borough of Sunderland (a) in May 1979, and (b) in May 1988 if calculated on the same basis as in 1979.

Mr. Lee: The requested information is not available. Unemployment statistics for local authority districts are available only from June 1983. My Department does not estimate unemployment on any previous definition as it is impossible to estimate what the various effects of changes in coverage of the unemployment count would now be.

Redundancies (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the redundancies notified in the textile industry in the Bradford travel-to-work area for each month in 1988 to the most recent practicable date, stating the cause of the redundancies in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information regarding individual firms given to the Department under the redundancy handling provisions of the Employment Protection Act 1975 is given in confidence. So far in 1988, 13 firms have submitted notifications in the Bradford area involving 587 proposed dismissals. The monthly incidence is:

	Number of firms	Number of employees
January	—	—
February	1	33
March	2	37
April	2	123
May	1	15
June	4	304
July	[1]3	75

[1] To date.

The grounds given for the redundancies (more than one in some cases) were:

	Number
Liquidation	5
Plant closure	2
Reduced product demand	7
New equipment	1
Organisational changes	2

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give separate figures for the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available as requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the number of permanent staff in the Department of Employment statistics division was 330 in April 1979, 268 in April 1984 and 229 in April 1988 (of whom 29 are professional statisticians). The total numbers of staff employed on statistics services in the Department of Employment and Manpower Services Commission was 1,404 in May 1979 and 849 in April 1984.

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Cope: Sixty people are presently employed in the information division of this Department.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Cope: Estimated expenditure by this Department on press and public relations for 1988-89 is £1·46 million. This includes an estimated £199,616 for staff transferred from the Manpower Services Commission (now the Training Commission) on the creation of the employment service.

Note: The above figure represents general administrative expenditure relating to costs for staff, accommodation and for regional services.

Hospitals (Inspections)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how regularly hospitals and health centres are inspected by the Health and Safety Executive as an average, on a national scale.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when each of the hospitals and health centres in the Southport and Formby district health authority was last inspected by the Health and Safety Executive; and what was the outcome in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average percentage of disposable income spent on housing in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: The average proportion of household disposable income spent on housing in Northern Ireland in 1985-86, the most recent years for which information is available, was 13·3 per cent.

Prisoners

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the review of prisoners detained at the Secretary of State's pleasure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend hopes to make a statement shortly.

Integrated School Places

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to make available integrated school places for all the children who would like to attend such a school.

Dr. Mawhinney: The recent consultation document on education reform in Northern Ireland contains proposals which would offer a further avenue for the expression of parental wishes for integrated education, in the form of grant-maintained integrated schools. In addition, I recently approved grant-aided voluntary maintained status, from 1 August 1988, for Hazelwood college, Belfast, All Children's integrated primary school, Newcastle, and Bridge primary school, Banbridge; I have also approved an extension to four-form entry for Lagan college, Belfast.

Farmers (Statistics)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will specify the number of farmers engaged in (a) lamb, (b) beef and (c) cereal production in Northern Ireland during each year since 1979.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 20 July 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the numbers of farms returning (a) sheep, (b) cattle of one year old and over for slaughter, and (c) cereals, in the agricultural census in June of each year, are as follows:—

June Census	Sheep	Slaughter cattle one year old and over	Cereals
1979	8,243	25,209	10,473
1980	8,398	25,014	10,026
1981	8,369	22,413	9,417
1982	8,607	21,498	8,216
1983	8,837	21,721	7,807
1984	8,986	22,090	7,873
1985	9,372	21,885	7,793
1986	9,650	21,995	7,390
1987	9,971	20,881	6,972

Notes:

1. Between 1980 and 1981, 6,690 very small holdings were excluded from the main census as a result of a change in the threshold for inclusion.
2. Some farms may have returned a combination of the categories.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Reconstruction Projects

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if will give the reasons for delaying the start of work on some of the motorway reconstruction projects announced on 22 March, Official Report, column 61; if he will list those schemes announced then on which tenders have not yet been invited; if he will list those schemes announced then on what tenders have been invited but contracts not yet issued; and if he will estimate the backlog of motorway reconstruction that will be outstanding on 31 March 1989.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The general situation was explained in answer to a question by my hon. Friend on 20

June 1988, at column 455. The reasons for delaying some capital maintenance works is the need to keep spending on the road programme as a whole within financial provision. We are currently reviewing what further works can go ahead in this financial year. Pending completion of the review it is not possible to estimate the implication of the delay for the backlog of motorway renewals.

The following are the details sought of individual schemes:

British Rail

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about British Rail's intentions with regard to reinvesting the £290 million operating surplus for 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail's 1988 corporate plan, which was published on 19 July, forecasts investment of approximately £3·8 billion (at 1988-89 prices) over the next five years. This investment is in a variety of projects including new locomotives, new rolling stock, electrification, signalling modernisation, and so on.

Computer Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are just over 4,000 work stations in the Department of Transport including terminals, microcomputers and word processors, giving a ratio of one work station to every 3·5 members of staff. It is not possible to give a figure for the overall increase planned over the next five years: this is dependent on the outcome of work currently in progress.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The members of the senior level information technology steering committee for the Department of Transport are:

Deputy Secretary, Road Safety and Licensing, Principal Finance Officer (Chairman)
Under Secretary, Road and Vehicle Safety
Under Secretary, Freight
Under Secretary, Marine and Ports
Director of Administrative Resources
Director of Personnel Management and Training
Director of Driver and Vehicle Licensing
Director of Statistics
Director (Transport), West Midland Regional Office
Director, Drivers, Vehicles and Operators IT Directorate
Head of Business Efficiency Services
Director of Financial Management
Deputy Chief Highway Engineer
Assistant Director, TRRL
Head of IT strategic Planning Division
CCTA representative

None of its meetings over the past year has been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the staff in his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During the financial year 1987-88 one person at grade 2 and three people at grade 3 attended courses or training on information technology awareness or information technology management. In addition, three people at grade 3 attended management courses which had an information technology component.

Also, two of the people at grade 3 referred to by the Secretary of State for the Environment in his answer to my hon. Friend of 12 July have common service responsibilities covering this Department.

Boatmasters' Certificates

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals for the mutual recognition of boatmasters' certificates have been proposed by the Commission in a directive; what is the purpose of these proposals; which rivers would require other forms of recognition under the proposals; if the United Kingdom has a practice of awarding boatmasters' certificates; what will be the impact on United Kingdom boats of the proposed directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The proposed directive concerns boats carrying goods on major continental waterways, other than the Rhine. It would require national boatmasters' certificates to be reciprocally recognised. There are no comparable United Kingdom waterways and thus no equivalent qualifications. The proposal does not affect United Kingdom shipping.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when, at the present rate of increase in traffic flow, he expects the Severn bridge to reach design traffic capacity, as modified by current technical assessment of the safety load for the bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not ascribe design capacity to any type of road. The practical capacity of the Severn bridge varies according to the mix of traffic, driving conditions and the time of day and year.

The present strengthening work will ensure that safety considerations will not restrict the amount of traffic using the bridge.

Shipping Accidents

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what incidents have been reported to him involving vessels lost in unexplained circumstances, collision, snagging of nets, damage to fishing, pleasure or service craft in United Kingdom waters in the past two years; and if he will list each with the names of the vessels involved, any fatalities or injuries sustained, compensation paid and inquiries instituted in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is as follows:

	1986	1987
Vessels lost in unexplained circumstances	0	0
Vessels involved in collisions	40	37
Vessels lost due to collision	3	0
Fishing vessels lost due to snagging of nets	1	0
Fishing vessels involved in snagging of nets	0	3
Fishing vessels damaged	200	305
Fatalities in United Kingdom waters	16	7

Further information or a detailed breakdown for the above figures is not readily available and the cost of providing it would be disproportionate. However, all accidents reported to my Department are reviewed and inquiries instituted as appropriate.

Aire Valley Trunk Road

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he opens the Aire Valley trunk road on 2 August, he will make public reference to those people who have faced difficulties due to the blighting of property over the 20-year period since the construction of the Aire Valley motorway and the Aire Valley trunk road were proposed by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect to do so.

The Department's procedures are designed to limit the effects of uncertainty created by road proposals. Some blight on property is unavoidable.

In Airedale we are promoting a major new road in a narrow, developed and well populated valley.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure on advertising totalled £2,741,000. Expenditure on running the information division press and public relations services totalled £373,000. It is not possible to disaggregate the latter figure.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest estimate for information division press and public relation services costs for 1988-89 is £434,000. This figure covers the overall cost of running the press office, calculated using Her Majesty's HM Treasury simplified ready reckoner for staff and other costs.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what it the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimated spending by the Department of Transport in 1988-89 on publicity and advertising is £5,490,000—broken down as follows:

Television advertising	1,800,000
Radio advertising	70,000
Newspaper advertising	160,000
Other promotional material (posters, pamphlets etc)	3,460,000
Total	5,490,000

Departmental Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in his Department; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in the administrative posts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following table gives data for the permanent staff (including supernumeraries) in the directorate of statistics (DST) in the Department of Transport on 1 April 1984 and 1988, together with figures for the corresponding directorate (DESB) of the DOE-DTp common services structure in April 1979. There have been a number of changes in function in the nine years covered. For example, between 1979 and 1984, statistical work that had been carried out by 8½ staff in the National Ports Council was taken over; and between 1984 and 1988 10 posts were taken over from DTI for work on shipping and aviation statistics, and seven posts were added for work taken over following the abolition of the GLC. Statistical posts filled by members of the statistician group are shown at the top of the table. There are also three members of the group in statistical posts elsewhere in the Department and another is filling a basically administrative post.

The question asks about staff in the statistical divisions of the Department, and has been answered in those terms. This means that the staff figures do not correspond to those used in the 1980 Rayner review, quoted (for DTp and DOE combined) in the White Paper "Government Statistical Services" [Cmnd. 8236 of April 1981], which included some staff engaged on statistical work in other divisions in the Department.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Eighteen staff are presently employed in the Department of Transport's infomation division, press and public relations services.

Piper Alpha

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the reasons why assistance from a helicopter aboard the emergency support vessel Iolair was declined following the explosion on the Piper Alpha oil rig and as to how many minutes' flying time the Iolair helicopter was from the rig; if he will refer all the evidence available to his Department on this subject to the official inquiry investigating the disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The search and rescue operation in response to the Piper Alpha disaster was initiated and co-ordinated by HM Coastguard, Aberdeen.

Although the Iolair helicopter is a declared SAR resource, because of its equipment at night it has only a limited capability and is available to become airborne only after 60 minutes notice. At the time of the disaster Iolair was 20 minutes helicopter flying time away from Piper Alpha. For these reasons and because other more capable aircraft were available, this helicopter was not summoned by HM Coastguard.

The first helicopter arrived on scene within 10 minutes of the disaster but because of the intense heat was unable to get close enough to be able to assist in the recovery of survivors from either the platform or the sea. This applied to all helicopters which arrived thereafter. There was no shortage of aircraft and steps had to be taken to ensure flight safety, but on this occasion helicopters could be used only to transfer survivors from rescue ships into hospital.

In the small and congested area of airspace involved in any disaster an excess of helicopters can constitute a flight safety hazard and be detrimental to the conduct of SAR operations.

For this reason many offers of helicopter assistance made after the initiation of SAR operations had to be declined because of airspace congestion. However, as far as is known, no specific offer of the Iolair aircraft was made to Aberdeen Coastguard.

Department of Transport records will be made available to the official inquiry as required.

Railway Stations (Staffing)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many railway stations have become unstaffed in the last five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a management matter for the British Railways Board.

London Assessment Studies

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any recent communication from the Association of London Authorities about the London assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I received yesterday afternoon a letter from the chair of the ALA Planning and Transport Committee, copies of which had been issued widely.

The letter appears to be based on a number of misconceptions about the nature and content of the consultants' reports and does not reflect the discussions which have been held with the boroughs in each of the four study areas.

The reports, copies of which are available in the Library, contain a wide range of options including better management of existing facilities and major investment in public transport as well as road investment—which the letter greatly exaggerates.

I discussed the term of reference for this stage of the studies with the chair of the ALA Planning and Transport Committee last year and offered to meet him at any time if he was concerned at the way the studies were being conducted.

I am writing to him again to renew my invitation so that we can clear up any misconceptions about the studies and the way they are to be continued.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have been held with the boroughs and associations involved in the London assessment studies about the consultant's progress reports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport has chaired fruitful meetings with the authorities and the consultants involved in each of the four studies to discuss the consultants reports which were circulated beforehand.

The Department also meets the LBA, ALA and others concerned on a regular basis to discuss topics common to all four studies. The most recent meeting was held yesterday.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Computer Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Ministry currently has approximately 1,250 work stations in use, giving an overall ratio of one work station to eight civil servants. The Ministry's IT strategy plan for the next five years indicates that the number of work stations in use will grow to around 4,500 giving a ratio of 1:2.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry's senior information technology strategy committee consists of eight grade 3 officers providing a cross-section of the various business interests. The Central Computers and Telecommunications Agency is also represented and the committee is chaired by a member of the Ministry's management board. It has not been necessary for Ministers to attend personally any of the committee's meetings during the last year.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the staff in his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Ministry arranges comprehensive senior management training for all staff entering grade 3 level or above including appropriate attention to information technology awareness. During the last 12 months three officers have received such training.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Ward: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that all milk produced by cows treated with bovine somatotropin during the trial period is clearly marked as such at the point of sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Before field trials of veterinary medicines may be undertaken they must be authorised by means of an animal test certificate issued under the Medicines Act 1968. Certificates are issued only after a thorough evaluation of the data available relating to safety of the product. The Veterinary Products Committee, an independent committee of experts in veterinary and human health established under the Medicines Act, considered the evidence and advised that it was satisfied that the trials should proceed. Had there been any doubts the trials would not have been authorised.

As there is no safety hazard from the milk from treated cows there is no reason to impose any conditions on the disposal of milk from the trials.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total spending by my Department in 1987-88 as shown in Minim was as follows:

Press liaison and information policy	700,000
Advertising	655,000

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest figures for estimated spending by my Department in 1988-89 are as follows:

(a) Television advertising	Nil
(b) Radio advertising	Nil
(c) Newspaper advertising (in the trade press only)	30,000
(d) Other promotional material	775,000

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest figure for estimated spending by my Department on press liaison and information policy during 1988-89 as shown in Minim is £600,000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of staff presently employed in my Department's press liaison and information policy section is 20.

Farmers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will specify the number of farmers engaged in (a) lamb, (b) beef and (c) cereal production in each of the English regions, and in England as a whole during each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 20 July 1988]: I regret that information in precisely the form requested is not available. The tables, however, give results from the agricultural census for England at June each year for holdings with sheep and lambs, beef cattle and calves, and cereals.

Note: The figures for 1979 are not directly comparable with those for later years because of changes in census coverage.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many full-time jobs in agriculture have been lost, by county, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 12 July 1988, c. 133-34]: Information from the June agricultural censuses in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland on the numbers of full-time farmers, partners and directors, family workers, hired workers and salaried managers working on agricultural holdings is set out in the tables. These figures reflect the levels of employment at June in each year. A comparison between the figures for any two years does not, however, measure the change in the number of full-time jobs, as information on the number of vacancies is not recorded.

SCOTLAND

Sheriffs' Courts

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of, and how many, defendants who have pleaded not guilty to offences tried in the sheriffs' courts were convicted in the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table:

Persons proceeded against for crimes and offences in sheriffs[1] courts, Scotland

	1985	1986	1987
Persons pleading not guilty	26,267	27,402	23,802
Persons pleading not guilty but against whom a charge was proved	14,335	14,960	11,558
Percentage	54·6	54·6	48·6

Supply Estimates (Class XVI, Vote 14)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what he estimates will be the reduction in the number of research projects funded by his Department resulting from the provisional reduction in research expenditure for 1988-89, class XVI, vote 14.01.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Planned expenditure on health research projects funded by the Scottish Home and Health Department in 1988-89 has not been reduced compared with 1987-88. The provisional figure for expenditure outturn for 1987-88 was £4·764 million, and £4·795 million has been provided for 1988-89.

Skiing

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's level of support for skiing.

Mr. Lang: It is the Government's policy to encourage ski development where this is consistent with planning requirements and to provide assistance to viable proposals. Over the past five years the Government, through their various agencies, has provided support of over £1·2 million.

Care and Protection

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the number of people who have been removed from their houses under section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948 and under the National Assistance (Amendment) Act 1951 for the years 1982 to 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Prisoners

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of visits made to prisoners serving sentence, and the average number of sentenced prisoners held, during each of the last six months at each of the following prisons: (a) Peterhead, (b) Shotts, (c) Glenochil, (d) Perth and (e) Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the tables for the latest six-month periods for which figures are available.

Table 1—Total number of visits made to sentenced prisoners

	Peterhead	Shotts	Glenochil[1]	Perth	Edinburgh
January 1988	94	807	1,169	780	676

June 1988	160	1,079	638	830	630

[1] Prior to serious disturbances at Glenochil prison in April 1988 the number of visits allowed to prisoners was substantially in excess of the normal entitlement.

AIDS

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information on HIV infection and AIDS is made available to prisoners and young offenders in Scottish institutions; and what services for help and advice are available to them.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A range of information on HIV infections and AIDS is generally available in the form of leaflets, posters, videos and talks by specialists. More specific help and advice is available for those who request or need it, from prison medical officers, from nursing staff who are increasingly being trained in appropriate counselling methods, from social workers and from a number of outside agencies which are involved in providing such services within penal establishments.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for how long it is normal practice in Scottish prisons to confine prisoners to their cells every day; for what offences confinement for 23 hours is carried out as a punishment; and if any prisoners in Scottish prisons are currently undergoing such punishment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not normal practice in Scottish prisons to confine prisoners to their cells every day. Rule 55(3) of the Prison (Scotland) Rules 1952 provides that as far as practicable, arrangements shall be made for prisoners to work for at least eight hours outside their cells in association with other prisoners. Rule 100(1) further provides that all prisoners not employed on outside work shall take exercise daily for one hour, in the open air except in inclement weather. The above periods are additional to whatever periods of association—for example, at recreation, mealtimes, visits etc—a prisoner may be allowed as a privilege.

Cellular confinement for a period not exceeding three days is one of the range of punishments laid down in rule 43 of the same rules which may be awarded by a governor to a prisoner found guilty of any of the offences laid down in rule 42. No prisoners in Scottish prisons are currently undergoing such punishment, although at any one time a very small number of Scottish prisoners may effectively be confined to cell as a result of having been awarded a combination of punishments including exclusion from associated work and forfeiture of the privileges of association at other times of the day.

Prisoners (Glenochil Prison)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why nine prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Glenochil, were placed in handcuffs at 6 am on Friday 11 December 1987 from which they were not released until their arrival in cells at Her Majesty's prison Peterhead; and why this was done without any information on where they were being taken.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The inmates were transferred to Peterhead in the interests of discipline and good order. They were given minimal advance notice of their transfer to reduce the possibility of disruption. The degree of security required by an inmate being transferred is a matter for the governor, who decided in this case that mechanical restraints were required. The inmates were informed at the time of transfer of their destination.

Abortion

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list the numbers of legal abortions performed in Great Britain on women resident in each health board area in Scotland in 1987, the numbers of National Health Service abortions performed in Scotland on women resident in each health board area in 1987 and the estimated numbers of women aged 15 to 44 years resident in each health board area in Scotland in mid-1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table.

Waste Disposal

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has as to how many local authorities in Scotland which are responsible for domestic waste disposal services separate such domestic waste into (a) glass, (b) metal, (c) plastic and (d) papers for recycling purposes;

(2) what information he has as to what proportion of the total number of local authorities responsible for domestic waste disposal in Scotland separate all or part of their domestic waste into different categories for recycling purposes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland the authorities responsible for collection and disposal of household waste are the 53 district and three islands councils. Forty-three authorities, just over three-quarters, last year undertook some separation of waste into one or more components for recycling. Thirty-seven authorities separated out glass, 10 separated out metal and 28 separated out paper. Information is not held centrally on whether these components originated from domestic or commercial waste streams nor on whether there is any separation of plastic.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers on hospital waiting lists by area and speciality for each year since 1974 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested for the years 1974 to 1977 is contained in Scottish Health Statistics (table 6.3 for 1974 and 1975; table 6.2 for 1976 and 1977) copies of which are in the Library of the House. I have arranged for the information for 1978 and later years to be placed in the Library of the House.

Health Boards (Staff)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each health board area the number of whole-time employed staff and number of hours worked of (a) hospital nurses, (b) midwives, (c) health visitors, (d) district nurses, (e) ancillary staff, (f) ambulance personnel and (g) adminstrative and clerical staff for each year from 1974 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No information is held centrally about actual numbers of hours worked by health board staff. Information about whole-time employed staff could be provided for each heallh board for the time period specified only at disproportionate cost. Information about whole-time employed staff in the country as a whole, along with whole-time equivalent staff numbers for each health board is to be found in Scottish Health Statistics, published annually by information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency in Scotland, copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) TV advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Rifkind: The planned expenditure of £3·1 million relates to a number of campaigns the detailed planning of which as is usual at this time of year is not yet complete, and it follows that no breakdown of the expenditure by media is possible.

Housing

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he will be making to the report of the Royal Environmental Health Institute of Scotland on "Housing Standards for the 1990s—The Need for a Change in the Tolerable Standard," a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In May, my right hon. and learned Friend issued the consultation paper "Private Housing Renewal: the Government's Proposals for Scotland", which details proposals for the reform of the home improvement system, including a revision of the statutory tolerable standard. The institute's report will be taken into account in the Government's response to comments on the consultation paper.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of people in employment in Scotland and in each travel-to-work area for each month between January 1987 and June 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Lang: Monthly estimates are not available. The table gives quarterly estimates of the civilian work force in employment, which comprises employees in employment, the self-employed, and participants[1] on work-related Government training programmes. These figures are available only for Scotland as a whole.

The civilian work force in employment

[1] The estimates of participants on work-related Government training programmes are not seasonally adjusted.

The latest estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in each travel-to-work area come from the 1984 census of employment: some results are given in the December 1987 "Scottish Economic Bulletin", which is available in the Library of the House. The latest estimates of self-employment by area within Scotland come from the 1981 census of population. The numbers of participants on work-related Government training programmes are not collected for individual travel-to-work areas.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the estimated total number of self-employed people in Scotland and in each travel-to-work area for each month between January 1987 and June 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Lang: The only available estimates relate to Scotland and are as follows:

These estimates are prepared by the Department of Employment on the basis of the 1981 census of population updated by the labour force surveys. The figures for June each year only are regularly published, and figures for other quarters are estimated by interpolation and projection: all figures are subject to sampling errors. The figures cannot be reliably broken down between travel-to-work areas.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds registered as unemployed in Scotland and in each travel-to-work area for each month between January 1987 and June 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is available on a quarterly basis only.

The total number of unemployed claimants aged 16 and 17 in Scotland and in each travel-to-work area for each quarterly period between January 1987 and June 1988 inclusive is shown in the table.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of people on training schemes in Scotland and in each travel-to-work area for each month between January 1987 and June 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

Table 1 gives the number of filled places for YTS and the community programme, and table 2 the number of starts on adult training schemes from January 1987 to June 1988 (inclusive). YTS figures for June 1988 are not yet available.

Statistics are not collected on a travel-to-work area basis.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide statistics concerning the designation of the unemployment claimants leaving the register in Scotland and in each travel-to-work area for each month between January 1987 and June 1988 inclusive for (a) training schemes, (b) retirement, (c) transferring to other benefits and (d) jobs.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available.

Scottish Chess Association

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has reviewed his decision to remove the international travel grant from the Scottish Chess Association.

Mr. Rifkind: In the special circumstances applying this year I have decided to offer the Scottish Chess Association a grant towards the cost of sending competitors to the World Olympiad and to the World Junior Championship.

Mental Handicap and Mental Illness Hospitals

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the staffing of mental handicap and mental illness hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I congratulate health boards on making considerable improvements in recent years in the staffing of mental handicap and mental illness hospitals. Between 1979 and 1987 the number of nursing staff increased by 25 per cent. in both mental handicap and mental illness hospitals. Within those figures the number of qualified nurses increased even more—by 36 per cent. in mental handicap hospitals and 32 per cent. in mental illness hospitals. At the same time the number of patients being cared for in the hospitals decreased by 16 per cent.—some 3,400 people—in accordance with the Government's policy that, whenever possible and appropriate to the needs of the person concerned, support should be provided in the community in preference to admission to hospital or continued residence in hospital.

Despite these improvements in the ratio of nurses to patients, my right hon. and learned Friend has, however, been concerned to note some continued criticism of staffing standards, and has therefore considered available evidence on ways of assessing staffing requirements. Some work on this has been carried out in the mental handicap field. In 1985 the Scottish Home and Health Department recommended to health boards that, until such time as a more appropriate system had been devised for assessing nurse staffing requirements generally, they should use the Telford consultative approach to assess, for planning purposes, the nurse staffing requirements in mental handicap hospitals. I have placed in the Library of the House a report of the results of that exercise.

This shows that in 1986 there was a gap between the number of staff in posts and the estimated number of staff required following the application of the Telford approach. By February this year, however, the ratio of staff to patients had improved both because of the increase in the number of staff, and because of the decrease in the number of patients. It is not possible to judge what the estimated nursing requirement would now be, in terms of the Telford approach, because the results depend on a judgment on the nursing needs of individual patients which are of course likely to have changed since 1986, and because the estimated requirement may have been affected by other changes in staffing and working practices.

The Telford approach was used as a first step towards estimating nursing requirements. There is a need for further study of other methods, and for a review of all approaches currently available in the field of mental illness. In these two fields of mental handicap and mental illness it is also important to take account of the contribution of other professions such as occupational therapists, psychologists and social workers, and to consider multi-disciplinary ways of assessing staffing requirements. I have therefore asked the Scottish Home and Health Department to set further work in hand on other available methods, with a view to giving health boards further guidance in due course.

Meantime I commend the report of the Telford exercise to health boards for use as an interim local planning tool in relation to their mental handicap hospitals. They will wish to look closely at the staffing levels in those hospitals where the 1986 exercise showed the largest gaps between staff in post and estimated requirement. They will also wish to inquire further where the reports shows major variation between one hospital and another. In many cases they will be able to point to improvements in the ratio of staff to patients since 1986 but they will wish to consider the extent to which they can make further improvements within the resources available to them.

Finally, I am concerned that the figures collected in February this year show that the funded establishment for qualified nurses in the 16 mental handicap hospitals studied was 7 per cent. higher than the number in post. This suggests that health boards are finding difficulty in recruiting sufficient numbers of qualified mental handicap nurses, although they are largely able to fill the vacancies with nursing assistants. The Scottish Home and Health Department has recently discussed with boards target figures for intakes to all branches of nurse training. I am glad to say that these discussions showed general recognition that increased recruitment to both mental illness and mental handicap training was required.

Computer Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 20 July 1988]: At present there are about 1,300 computer work stations in the Scottish Office, excluding the minor departments and the Scottish prison service. This represents one work station for every five members of staff. This figure includes linked terminals and both linked and stand-alone microcomputers including those used for word processing but excludes portable text processors. Within the next five years the number of work stations may, on current evidence, rise to approximately 1,700—a ratio of one to every three staff.

Information Technology Strategy Committee

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The senior information technology committee in the Scottish Office is the standing committee on information technology services which is chaired by the deputy secretary, Central Services. Its membership comprises, in addition to a representative of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, the director of information technology in the Scottish Office and representatives from each Scottish Office user department, and from relevant central service interests including finance, manpower, office management, computer services, telecommunications and statistical services. The committee meets three times a year. Ministers do not attend meetings but are consulted as appropriate.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: At 1 July 1988 the number of staff in the information officer grades employed in the Scottish information office was 29.

Tourism

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the promotion of tourism in Scotland in the 1990s; and what are his strategic objectives for that period.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 April 1988]: The Scottish Tourist Board and the Highlands and Islands Development Board, in close co-operation with the travel trade, will continue to promote Scotland as a quality destination for holiday and business visitors in the United Kingdom and selected overseas markets. The strategy will focus on expanding the domestic market outside the main holiday season, increasing the size of the North American and European markets, and developing long-haul markets particularly Japan and Australia. Marketing plans will be reviewed annually to take account of changing market opportunities.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people he estimates are employed in the Scottish tourist industry.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 April 1988]: The information is as follows:

Empty Houses

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures showing both the numbers and percentage of empty houses in (i) the public sector and (ii) the private sector in each local housing authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 July 1988]: The information requested for the public sector is given in the table. Comparable figures for the private sector are not collected centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Commercial Leases

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to bring within the ambit of the criminal law the offer of unfair terms in commercial leases by corporate landlords.

Mr. Trippier: The terms of a commercial lease for business premises are a matter for free negotiation between potential landlord and tenant on the open market. If it were to be established by the courts that the law affords inadequate protection in this area we would need to look at the matter further.

Voluntary Organisations (Grant Aid)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific legislative powers currently exist for the provision of revenue grant aid to voluntary organisations providing emergency accommodation for the single homeless in Northern Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: Section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 empowers my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales to give revenue deficit grants to voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness. These powers are also available to local authorities in England and Wales. In Scotland, section 39 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 gives similar powers to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and to Scottish local authorities. A revenue deficit grant, paid under section 55 of the Housing Associations Act 1985 may be paid to housing associations in Great Britain, registered with the Housing Corporation, which are managing hostels, including any providing emergency accommodation for the homeless. In the 57 eligible authorities in England, urban programme grants, paid under the Local Government Grants (Social Need) Act 1969, may be used to provide short-term revenue support for voluntary organisations carrying out projects for the single homeless. These powers may also be used to provide assistance in Scotland and Wales. In Wales, the Secretary of State is empowered under section 28(b) of the National Health Service Act 1977 as amended by section 1 of the Health and Social Services and Social Security

Adjudications Act 1983 to give grant aid to voluntary organisations providing emergency accommodation for single homeless persons who are elderly.

Under schedule 5 to the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services may make contributions to the funds of voluntary organisations providing temporary board and lodging for people without a settled way of life in Great Britain. He also has powers under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 which would enable him to make such grants.

By virtue of article 71 of the Health and Personal Services (NI) Order 1972, the Department of Health and Social Services and the four health and social service boards may make grants, including revenue grants, to voluntary organisations providing emergency accommodation for the single homeless in Northern Ireland. Article 140 of the Housing (NI) Order 1981 enables a revenue deficit grant to be paid to registered housing associations managing hostels for the homeless in Northern Ireland.

Hutchings Wharf

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his policy to keep some industrial space at Hutchings wharf on the Isle of Dogs.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for the London docklands development corporation, the local planning authority for the area.

Rating Reform

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any plans for members of the police force to be exempted from paying the community charge.

Mr. Howard: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will seek to amend the Local Government Finance Bill, to limit the data to be given to the community charge officer to an individual's name and address.

Mr. Howard: No. The Bill limits the registration officer to requesting locally held information which he requires for the purpose of carrying out his functions.

Waste Disposal

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to what proportion of the total number of local authorities responsible for domestic waste disposal in England separate all or part of their domestic waste into different categories for recycling purposes;

(2) what information he has to how many local authorities in England which are responsible for domestic waste disposal services separate such domestic waste into (a) glass, (b) metal, (c) plastic and (d) papers for recycling purposes.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department does not collect information on the number of local authorities who separate their domestic waste into different categories. It is, however, known that a number of authorities operate mechanical separation plants and many others provide facilities for the public to separate their own waste for recycling.

Right to Buy (Camden)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), first wrote to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate informing him that she was going to meet the leader of Camden borough council to discuss the council's performance in respect of the right to buy legislation; and for what date the meeting has been arranged.

Mrs. Roe: 10 June and 25 July respectively.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the frequency with which applications to buy council-owned houses in the Hendon, South constituency have been delayed due to the inability of Camden council to define the boundaries of such properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My hon. Friend has recently drawn attention to one such case; the council's monthly statistical returns to the Department do not include addresses or the reasons for particular applications being delayed.

Rural Housing

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the closing date for responses to his consultative document entitled "Housing in Rural Areas: Village Housing and New Villages".

Mrs. Roe: We have asked for comments by 26 September 1988.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the obligations under the EEC protection of birds directive in so far as it applies to the proposed Cardiff bay barrage scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Cardiff bay is part of the area of the Severn estuary which has been identified by the nature conservancy council as meeting the criteria for designation as a special protection area under the EC birds directive. It is our policy that potential special protection areas such as the Severn estuary should be dealt with on the same basis as those which have been formally classified, when development proposals are being considered.

Article 4 of the EC birds directive, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, requires member states to take specific steps for the conservation of the habitats of:

(a) species in danger of extinction;
(b) species vulnerable to specific changes in their habitat;
(c) species considered rare because of small populations or restricted local distribution;
(d) other species requiring particular attention for reasons for the specific nature of their habitat;
(e) regularly occurring migratory species.

We shall have careful regard to these obligations in examining the Cardiff bay barrage proposals and will ensure that Parliament is fully advised of the relevant requirements of the directive in considering the private Bill being promoted by South Glamorgan county council.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88;

(2) what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material;

(3) what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: The total spend for paid publicity and associated staff costs for my Department, including PSA, was £4·8 million in 1987-88. The provision for 1988-89 is £7·1 million. As explained in my answer to the hon. Member on 18 December 1987 at columns 793-94, figures giving a breakdown between advertising and promotion are no longer kept separately.

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in his Department; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

Mr. Ridley: The numbers and grades of staff in the statistical divisions[1] of DOE(C) at 1 April 1979, 1 April 1984 and 1 April 1988 are as follows:

	1 April 1979	1 April 1984	1 April 1988
Chief Statistician	5	5	5
Statistician	23	20	19
Senior Assistant Statistician	7	4	3
Assistant Statistician	2	2	2
SEO	5	3	4
HEO	20	14	15
EO	52	29	37
AO	124	54	41
AA	20	18	20
Secretarial/Typist	6	7	4

[1] The statistical divisions in DOE(C) comprise Housing Data Statistics, Construction Industry Statistics, Local Authority Statistics, land and General Statistics, and Environmental Protection Statistics.

There are also statisticians employed throughout the Department in posts of a largely administrative nature; these numbered 22 at 1 April 1979, 9 at 1 April 1984 and 11 at 1 April 1988.

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Ridley: At 1 April 1988 a total of 40 people were employed in the information directorate of the Department of the Environment.

Water Privatisation

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to privatise the 10 regional water authorities in England and Wales simultaneously in a single flotation.

Mr. Ridley: Yes.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payments have been made to Kleinwort Benson for the consultancy work undertaken in connection with the proposed privatisation of the water authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Ridley: Since the consultancy was arranged by the water authorities, this information is not available to my Department.

Council House Sales

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will express in 1988 terms the maximum cash discounts offered in 1980 under the Housing Act 1980 indexed for house price inflation in Greater London.

Mrs. Roe: The maximum discount on council house sales would be £64,000, if the figure of £25,000 set in October 1980 were to be raised by the percentage increase in Greater London house prices between the fourth quarter 1980 and the first quarter 1988.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what each local authority would have received in 1988-89 from the national non-domestic rate pool based on a distribution of £245 per adult.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed the information requested in the Library.

Rain Forests

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list what information he has on the countries in which the destruction of rain forests is still allowed and taking place.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department does not hold details of the depletion of rain forests in individual countries. The Government share the worldwide concern caused by unsustainable exploitation of these forests and actively supports international initiatives to reverse their decline. During the recent meeting of the International Tropical Timber Organisation (ITTO) the United Kingdom delegation was instrumental in getting agreement that the ITTO should give priority to encouraging the development of national policies aimed at sustainable forest management.

Richmond Yard

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what purpose the Property Services Agency made an estimate of the cost of carrying out an in-house valuation of the rental value of Richmond yard.

Mr. Chope: For its own internal management purposes.

Widdicombe Report

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government have yet reached conclusions on the report of the Widdicombe committee.

Mr. Howard: The Government response to the report of the Widdicombe committee on the conduct of local authority business has been published today as a White Paper (Cm. 433).

The Widdicombe committee provided us with a comprehensive analysis of the way in which local authorities are operating. The Government have since conducted extensive consultations on the committee's report. We are grateful to the committee, to all who assisted it and to all who have commented on its report, for the quality of the analysis and contributions to the debate.

Matters have not, however, stood still since the committee was appointed. There have been significant changes, most recently in the legislation requiring competition for major services and the proposals for a community charge. The Government's response therefore takes account of the greater emphasis on efficiency, local accountability and meeting the needs of the customer which these changes in legislation and attitude are introducing, as well as of the views expressed in the consultation process.

The central conclusion of the Widdicombe report was that, as a result of increased politicisation, there was a need for a package of measures to strengthen local democracy and accountability. The Government accept this central conclusion. The White Paper sets out our proposed package. With one important exception it accepts the general approach recommended, but differs in emphasis and extent.

The most significant difference, which accords with the more or less unanimous views of local authorities, is that we do not accept the proposal for a statutory post of chief executive. The Widdicombe committee recommends that such a chief executive should have both overall management responsibility for the services of the authority, and the power, on certain matters, to control the decisions of the elected councillors. The Government do not consider that a requirement for such a post is appropriate.

We therefore propose a package with the following main elements: Council committees and sub-committees would be required to reflect the political composition of the council. Voting powers would be removed from co-opted members of decision-making committees. This would not apply to representatives on education committees of churches and other organisations providing voluntary schools. It would not affect the appointment of magistrates to police committees.

We accept the need for a core of standing orders which ensure a proper balance between the despatch of business and the rights of minorities. We propose that these should be developed in consultation with the local authority associations.

Turning to the position of councillors, we accept the proposed statutory register of councillors' pecuniary interests. We also accept the advantages of a basic flat-rate allowance for councillors in place of the present attendance and financial loss allowances. We propose discussions with the local authority associations over this, but we see no justification for increases in overall expenditure on councillors' remuneration.

We accept the need for measures, to ensure an efficient, expert and politically impartial local authority service.

We propose that chief and deputy chief officers and others who advise, or act on behalf of, local authorities should not be members of other local authorities or undertake public political activity. This prohibition would be analogous to the existing rules for civil servants. It would be more percisely targeted, and would apply to a more restricted class, than the corresponding proposal of the Widdicombe committee. It would be complemented by the proposed limit on paid leave for other council staff for activities as local authority members.

All local authority appointments outside the politically restricted group would be required to be delegated to the appropriate officer.

We also propose that officers should be appointed specifically to advise on the legality and propriety of the authority's activities, and on the management of the authority's services.

The Widdicombe committee also considered the powers of local authorities to undertake discretionary expenditure.

We propose a new, circumscribed power for local authorities to undertake economic development activity in place of existing powers.

In consequence, the limit on discretionary spending under sections 137 and 83 would be adjusted and restated in terms of an amount per head of the adult population. The Government propose that this should be £5 per head with a single tier of local government and £2·50 for each tier elsewhere. The current capacity for expenditure under this power by community and parish councils would also be redistributed on the basis of population.

The thorough work of the Widdicombe committee and the widespread consultation on its recommendations have provided the basis for an effective overhaul of the way in which local government operates. Coupled with existing legislative changes and with the changes in attitude which are becoming apparent, the proposals will help to keep the local government system in this country functioning on a secure basis, to enable it to carry on its essential work into the next century.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of polychlorinated biphenyls being processed by waste treatment plants not licensed to treat them.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 July 1988]: The licensing and subsequent enforcement, of waste disposal facilities is a waste disposal authority function. The Department does not keep central records on this topic, but I am aware of one successful prosecution, in 1981, for the illegal deposit of polychlorinated biphenyl contaminated oils at a treatment plant.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of the use of polychlorinated biphenyls in landfilling operations.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 July 1988]: Polychlorinated Biphenyls (PCBs) will be found, at very low concentrations, in ordinary domestic refuse due to the presence of the occasional capacitor from old domestic appliances. Consequently, any landfill accepting domestic refuse will contain traces of PCBs—estimated at less than seven parts per million (ppm).

In 1985, the former hazardous waste inspectorate issued guidance, recommending that landfill disposal should be prohibited for large quantities of waste significantly contaminated with PCBs, apart from exceptional and occasional circumstances.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has regarding imported consignments of toxic waste not remaining on the dockside for the three days required by law to give waste disposal authorities time to check their contents.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 July 1988]: The three-day period is intended to give notice to waste disposal authorities so that they can monitor and verify the arrival of a consignment at its intended disposal site. Records of special waste movements are not kept centrally. Waste disposal authorities, as part of their enforcement duties, may check on the composition of consignments at any time.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has regarding imported cargoes of toxic waste being stored among general cargoes in port areas.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 July 1988]: None. The Collection and Disposal of Wastes Regulations 1988, however, will bring into the site licensing regime storage areas involving prescribed quantities of special waste, including storage areas at ports. It will be for the local waste disposal authority to decide on any requirement for licensing once this part of the regulations comes into force on 3 October 1988.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on approaches to his Department in relation to the Crown Suppliers from (a) Sir Basil Feldman, (b) Mr. Robert Maxwell and (c) the management buy-out team.

Mr. Chope: All approaches relating sale of the Crown Suppliers, whether to my Department or to Samuel Montagu and Co, the merchant bankers advising the Government on the sale, are treated as having been made in confidence.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether it is intended to issue invitations to tender the purchase of the Crown Suppliers before legislation is enacted or after; and precisely what legislation is required to privatise that organisation;

(2) whether he will give the staff of the Crown Suppliers the option of remaining in the Civil Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I shall announce further details of our proposals for privatisation as soon as possible.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on whose authority Mr. John Cross of the Crown Suppliers has asked all staff in procurement division for details of their experience, length of service, and so on; and in what capacity and for what purpose he was acting.

Mr. Chope: The controller of the Crown Suppliers informs me that this was done in the course of the day-to-day management of the Crown Suppliers.

ENERGY

North Sea Installations

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many inspectors are directly employed by his Department to inspect offshore oil and gas installations in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea; and what are their duties.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department currently employs 37 professional inspectors, eight of whom are full-time field inspectors engaged in offshore installation inspections.

Their duties are to ensure that the requirements of offshore safety legislation, administered by my Department, are met.

Piper Alpha Rig

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the terms of reference of the public inquiry into the Piper Alpha accident; and when it will begin.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The terms of reference for the public inquiry are set out in the instrument of appointment for Lord Cullen, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. A date for the start of the inquiry has yet to be decided. There is much preparatory work to be done. I am also anxious that the results of the technical investigation into the cause of the accident should be available at an early stage of the proceedings of the inquiry.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now make available the recent inspector's safety report on the Piper Alpha rig to both the public and safety health commission inquiries.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The report has already been made available to the technical investigation team headed by the director of my safety directorate and will be available to the public inquiry.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the dates since 1982 when his Department last met trade unions to discuss safety and working conditions on offshore installations; and what action he took.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since 1982 my officials have held quarterly meetings with union representatives to discuss safety matters. We value these regular meetings and have taken follow up action on a number of points made by union representatives.

Mr. Prescott To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many gas leaks have been reported to his Department occurring on offshore installations in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information required could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the death and serious accident figures for each year since 1979 in the North sea offshore industry expressed as a proportion per 100,000 workers employed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Details are set out in the table, but are expressed per 1,000 workers employed as this is more appropriate in relation to the number of workers offshore. Figures for 1979 are not directly comparable with those for later years, as the basis for calculating the numbers employed changed in 1980:

Dangerous occurrences

Per 1,000 employees

	Dangerous occurrences	Deaths
1979	8·9	0·95
1980	5·3	0·20
1981	6·3	0·30
1982	8·4	0·60
1983	5·6	0·30
1984	6·0	0·40
1985	7·2	0·30
1986	7·5	0·10
1987	6·2	0·20

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what requirement there is for workers in the offshore industry to have a survival certificate; how much they cost to acquire; how much the industry contributed to safety and health training for each year since 1979; and how many employees have the certificate.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There is no requirement for offshore workers to obtain a survival certificate. The Offshore Installations (Operational Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations 1976 (SI 1976 1019) require operators to appoint competent personnel and to ensure that they have experience of equipment they are required to use for the operations they are required to carry out. The cost of safety and health training is a matter for the industry.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many installations there are in the British sector section of the North sea offshore industries; and how many safety inspections have been conducted on them for each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Two hundred and seventeen. Each installation is generally inspected at least once a year.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the estimated numbers of people employed in the offshore oil industry used in the accident figures for the years 1979 and 1980; how these calculations were arrived at; what difference it made to the death and serious accident figures for each of those years; and what steps are taken to ensure that these figures produced each year accurately reflect the extent of accidents in the North sea offshore industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Employment figures for 1979 were obtained from a survey carried out by my Department over a period of two weeks in September 1979 to cover all shifts on offshore installations. The total employed came to 10,500. Figures for 1980 were higher (22,000) reflecting a significant increase in activity offshore and a more comprehensive survey based on information collected by my Department and others which included, for example, people employed on service vessels, survey teams and construction support barges, who had not been included in the 1979 survey. The number of deaths included in the statistics for each of these years was unaffected by the changed basis for the numbers employed since companies are required by the Offshore Installations (Inspectors and Casualties) Regulations 1973 (SI 1973/1842) to report all accidents offshore.

JET Programme

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the purpose of the JET programme; and how much it has so far cost the EEC.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The JET experiment forms part of the European fusion programme which aims to establish fusion as a major energy source. The essential objective of JET is to obtain and study a high temperature plasma in conditions and dimensions approaching those needed in a fusion reactor. To the end of 1987, expenditure on JET totalled some 750 MioECU (£500 million at current rates of exchange).

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mr. Parkinson: The provisional figure for expenditure in 1987-88 by my Department on press and public relations is £460,000 and on advertising is £1·5 million. The figures include:

(i) expenditure by the Press Office;

(ii) staff costs (salaries, accommodation and common services) for all permanent information service and support staff in post in the Press Office, including the public inquiry point, on 31 March 1988.

(iii) expenditure on advertising by the Energy Efficiency Office and the Offshore Supplies Office, and in respect of publicity in connection with the collection of the second call on British Gas shares.

Statistical Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for 1979, 1984 and the most recent year the numbers of staff by grade in the statistical divisions in his Department; and if he will differentiate between staff in the statistical posts and staff in administrative posts.

Mr. Parkinson: The table gives the numbers of staff in post at the relevant dates, in the Department's economics and statistics division.

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Parkinson: The staffing of my Department's press office, including the public inquiry point and support staff, was 13 at 1 July 1988.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations for (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1988-89.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1987, c. 638.]: The estimated expenditure by my Department on press and public relations for 1987-88 is £456,000. Within this corrected figure common services are estimated at £97,000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department of press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Parkinson: The estimated expenditure for 1988-89 is £515,000.

This figure includes:

(i) forecast expenditure by the Press Office;

(ii) staff costs (salaries, accommodation and common services) for all permanent information service and support staff currently in post in the Press Office including the public inquiry point.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Parkinson: Provisional figures for expenditure by my Department in 1988-89 in the following areas are:

	£ million
Television advertising	nil
Radio advertising	nil
Press advertising, including newspapers	2·1
Other promotional material	1·7

CEGB

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the CEGB to discuss all aspects of the electricity supply industry.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements he intends to make to meet the costs of the public inquiry he has announced into the Piper Alpha disaster.

Mr. Parkinson: Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in a Supplementary Supply Estimate for the Department of Energy's Class VI, Vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure incurred by my Department in connection with the public inquiry of up to £500,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Children (Needs)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many district health authorities have set up liaison committees to consider the multiple needs of children across health, education and social services;

(2) if he will issue a circular instructing all district health authorities to set up liaison committees to consider the multiple needs of children across health, education and social services.

Mrs. Currie: Circular HC(78)5 asked health and local authorities to establish district handicap teams to bring together health, education and social service professionals to provide a co-ordinated assessment and support service for handicapped children and their families. We are currently undertaking a project in four health districts to examine the organisation and management of community child health services and involving all the relevant authorities. The aim is to issue a guidance document to authorities with examples of good practice, in due course. The other information requested is not available centrally.

Consultant Community Paediatricians

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many district health authorities have appointed consultant community paediatricians; and if he will list those which have and those which have not;

(2) what steps he is taking to require those district health authorities which have not appointed consultant community paediatricians to do so.

Mrs. Currie: The Court report in 1974 recommended the appointment of consultant community paediatricians to help provide a better co-ordinated and integrated service for children. A recent report from the faculty of Community Medicine also recommends such appointments. The responsibility for the appointment of consultants rests with individual health authorities. Allthough information on the number of districts that have consultant community paediatricians in post is not collected centrally, we do know that, in recent years, many districts have made such appointments and there are now at least 100 in post. Job descriptions and titles vary from district to district reflecting differing local circumstances.

Child Health

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about progress towards implementing the proposals of the Committee on Child Health Services 1976 (Cmnd. 6684).

Mrs. Currie: Circular HC(78)5 advised authorities of the Government's conclusions on the recommendations of the Court committee and asked authorities to review services in the light of the Government's decisions. Subsequently, this Government reaffirmed their commitment to the principles of the committee's findings in a debate in the other place on 28 October 1987, at columns 540-77. There has been considerable progress since the report was published, including two major projects; a departmental funded project studying the organisation and management of child health services in four health districts and a joint professional working party looking at the content and timing of these services. Both are expected to be completed in 1989. But, as everyone agreed in 1976, full implementation of the proposals would be achieved only in the longer rather than the shorter term. That remains the position.

Family Credit

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families are in receipt of family credit in the Crewe and Nantwich constituency.

Mr. Portillo: Family credit claims are dealt with centrally, and no information is available about claims from particular areas.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time which elapses before a claimant renewing a family credit claim receives the new book (a) nationally and (b) in Preston.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) on 7 July at column 725. Separate information about renewal claims is not available.

To facilitate the continuation of payment without a break, family credit renewal claims can be made up to four weeks before the end of the previous award.

Family Income Supplement

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families were in receipt of family income supplement during each financial year from 1982-83 to 1986-87.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to table 15.6 in the public expenditure White Paper 1988 (Cm. 288).

Community Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been paid out by his Department's local Doncaster office since 11 April on community care grants; to how many claimants; and what was the sum paid for comparable purposes up to 11 April.

Mr. Portillo: There are two Doncaster offices, Doncaster East and Doncaster West. Details of the numbers and financial amounts of social fund applications and payments for all local offices are placed in the Library at monthly intervals. Information about the number of applicants could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Prior to 11 April, single payments were given in a variety of circumstances. There are no figures available that are directly comparable with community care grants.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis the May figures for community care grants and budgeting loans were compiled in the light of the widespread delays in processing applications.

Mr. Portillo: The May figures comprise applications processed and awards made in that month. Applications processed comprise those where there has been a payment and those where a social fund officer has decided not to make a payment. Some offices do have arrears of applications awaiting processing which are not included in these figures, but there is no indication of widespread delays.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the payment of community care grants paid by offices of his Department covering Peckham.

Mr. Portillo: It is for social fund officers to determine the applications they receive, in accordance with the law and the Secretary of State's directions, taking account of the Secretary of State's guidance and any guidance on local priorities.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the social fund community care grants budget allocated to Peckham for the current financial year was spent in May and June in the offices of his Department covering Peckham.

Mr. Portillo: Details of local office social fund budgets and expenditure are in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of whether the present funding and staff provisions for the social fund in Scotland are adequate to meet the urgent needs of Scottish claimants.

Mr. Portillo: For information on funding, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 6 July at columns 631-33. As far as the staffing provisions for the social fund are concerned, the Department's aim is to match staffing to work loads. The social fund entailed new procedures and assumptions had to be made about the required time for and frequency of component activities. A review of social fund staffing has been undertaken in order to establish whether proper staffing resources have been allocated.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether, in the statistics on the operation of the social fund which he places in the Library, he will include (a) totals for each region, (b) the percentage of applications for community care grants processed during the month that receive an award, (c) the percentage of applications for budgeting loans processed during the month which receive an offer of a loan and (d) the percentage of applications for crisis loans processed during the month that receive an offer of a loan;

(2) whether, when he places statistics on the operation of the social fund in the Library, he will express these as cumulative totals for the year to date, including revisions to previous months' data and late returns.

Mr. Portillo: No. This would add considerably to the amount of information we have undertaken to provide, and for the most part these can be calculated from the data already provided.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, when he places statistics on the operation of the social fund in the Library, he will also provide the data on $5\frac{1}{4}$ in DOS compatible floppy disk.

Mr. Portillo: We are looking into that.

Pensioners (Christmas Bonus)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the change in the real value of the pensioners' Christmas bonus for each year since 1972.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Benefits

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will bring up to date the reply given to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 2 February 1987, Official Report, column 542, in respect of the value of major social security benefits, so as to include benefits payable from November 1987 under the earlier, and the new and now current arrangements.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table. It is not possible to make direct comparisons of rates of family income supplement and supplementary benefit with rates of family credit and income support, nor rates of housing benefit under the previous scheme with those under the revised scheme.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 5 May, Official Report, columns 550-51, if he will give details of how transitional payments for housing benefit will be recalculated following a change in the claimant's circumstances or in housing benefit entitlement; and if it will be the responsibility of the local authority either to send the relevant information to the central unit or to do the necessary recalculation.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 July 1988]: Transitional payments will be withdrawn if an applicant becomes entitled to income support or stops being responsible for rent, or rates, or both. Benefit will also stop if a single applicant dies or both of a couple die. Any other changes in circumstances that occur during the currency of an award will not affect the rate of benefit in payment. Applicants, or someone acting on their behalf, are asked to notify these changes directly to the transitional payments unit in Glasgow. The unit will then be responsible for adjusting benefit and normally local authorities will not be involved in the process.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1), pursuant to the answer of 5 May, Official Report, columns 550-51, in respect of transitional payments, if he is yet in a position to state when people can start making claims; if he will explain how the central unit will obtain the necessary information and documentation that will allow the calculation of the transitional payment for housing benefit claimants; and what information claimants should submit with their claims;

(2) if, pursuant to the answer of 5 May, Official Report, columns 550-51, in respect of the administration of transitional protection for housing benefit claimants, he will specify where claims for transitional payments can be made; and if claims will be accepted at both local Department of Health and Social Security offices and housing benefit offices, as well as at the central unit in Glasgow.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 July 1988]: Leaflet RR4 (Housing Benefit—New Rules), which contains an application form for transitional payments, has been available for several weeks from DHSS local offices, local authorities, post offices and through our Freepost and Freeline services. Completed application forms should be returned by Freepost to the transitional payments unit in Glasgow. Any that are received incorrectly at the Department's local offices or in local authorities will be forwarded to their correct destination. Normally nothing will be required from the applicant other than a completed application form RR4. Once application forms have been received by the transitional payments unit inquiry forms are issued to local authorities to obtain information necessary to establish eligibility for transitional payments.

Private Residential Care

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state for the latest available date the total payments in supplementary benefit to residents in private residential care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. However, I am able to provide figures for the combined supplementary benefit payments to claimants in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes. In November 1987 total expenditure on all such claimants was £772 million, based on average payments of £114·1 per week.

Health Service Commissioner (Report)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the annual report of the Health Service Commissioner for 1987-88.

Mrs. Currie: The Health Service Commissioner has, as in previous years, made a report on the performance of his functions in England, Scotland and Wales. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales presented the report to the House on Wednesday 13 July. It was published on 14 July (House of Commons paper No. 524) and copies are available from the Vote Office.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest year for which he has obtained data from local authority social services departments concerning the services they provide for people with disabilities; and how many local authorities failed to provide information.

Mr. Scott: The latest year for which data have been collected is the year ended 31 March 1987. Seven local authorities failed to provide returns.

Single Payments

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of supplementary benefit single payments for each of his Department's local offices in the counties of Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham, Northumbria, and Tyne and Wear, in May 1985, May 1986 and May 1987.

Mr. Portillo: Figures for the month of May are not readily available and would be disproportionately costly to obtain. However, the value of single payments made in the four-week periods ending 4 June 1985, 3 June 1986 and 2 June 1987 are given in the table. The local offices shown are those situated within the counties requested but office and county boundaries are not conterminous.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to give a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, on single payment claims, for which a holding answer was given on Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Portillo: I replied to the hon. Member today.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 16 June, when he will be in a position to give the national outstanding total of single payment claims as at 31 May.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1988, c. 549]: The number of cases awaiting action on single payment claims at 31 May 1988 was 210,014. This figure is provisional and subject to amendment.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of maternal deaths in England and Wales in (a) 1986, and (b) 1987 which were attributed to abortive outcomes and showing for each year the numbers which were attributed to (a) high hydatidiform mole, (b) other abnormal products of conception, (c) missed abortions, (d) ectopic pregnancies, (e) spontaneous abortions, (f) legally induced abortions, (g) illegally induced abortions, (h) unspecified abortions, (i) failed attempted abortions, and (j) complications following abortions and ectopic and molar pregnancies.

Mrs. Currie: Available information from the registration of deaths in England and Wales in 1986 and 1987 is shown in the table.

Number of maternal deaths registered in England and Wales, by selected underlying cause of death—1986-87

[1] International Classification of Diseases 9th revision.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of (a) direct maternal deaths, (b) indirect maternal deaths, and (c) associated maternal deaths in England and Wales in 1986 and 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Available information from the registration of deaths in England and Wales in 1986 and 1987 is shown in the table.

Number of (a) direct maternal deaths, (b) indirect maternal deaths, and (c) associated maternal deaths registered in England and Wales, by selected underlying cause of death—1986-87

	Number of deaths 1986	1987
Direct[1]	34	42
Indirect[2]	11	4
Associated[3]	3	6

[1] International Classification of Diseases (ICD) 9th revision code 630-676 (complications of pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium) excluding 647 and 648.

[2] ICD (9) 647: Infective and parasitic conditions in the mother classifiable elsewhere but complicating pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium.
648: Other current conditions in the mother classifiable elsewhere but complicating pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium.

[3] Deaths certified as associated with pregnancy or childbirth but not assigned to those causes.

Overpayments (Reclaims)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by what legal authority his Department reclaims overpayments made as a result of errors by his Department's staff.

Mr. Portillo: Overpayments of benefit made to a claimant are not recoverable if the independent adjudicating authorities determine that they result from official error.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets, (e) sextuplets, and (f) septuplets born in England and Wales in 1987; and what was the total number of maternities in that year.

Mrs. Currie: In 1987, there were 677,467 maternities in England and Wales, including:

	Number
Twins	7,186
Triplets	125
Quadruplets	7
Quintuplets	1
Sextuplets	0
Septuplets	1
All multiple maternities	7,320

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secetary of State for Social Services if he will give the number on waiting lists by region and specialty for each year since 1974 to date.

Mr. Newton: Summaries of hospital waiting lists by region for 1979 onwards have been placed in the Library. I am arranging for copies from 1975, the first year these figures were collected on a comparable basis, to 1978 to be similarly placed.

Health and Safety Executive (Reports)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what monitoring role his Department plays in ensuring that the reports of the Health and Safety Executive are implemented in relation to buildings for which he has responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Since the National Health Service is no longer a Crown body for the purposes of health and safety legislation, the Health and Safety Executive has the same legal powers to enforce health authorities to comply with its statutory notices as apply to employers generally. The Department is informed of all improvement and prohibition notices issued to health authorities in order that any new problem areas are incorporated into central guidance, and, where appropriate, covered in training. As part of the annual review process, regional health authorities are to be held to account for their monitoring of district health authorities' observance of statutory requirements for the health and safety of their staff and patients.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answers of 14 July, Official Report, column 551, he will set out in detail the cervical smear checking procedure used in the Christie hospital in respect of the smears from north Staffordshire; if the same procedure is used in respect of all samples; who carries out the routine checks referred to; and if the checks by independent advisers from other regions on the suspect slides have been completed.

Mrs. Currie: All cervical cancer smear tests carried out by Christie hospital, including those which came from Staffordshire and other districts from outside the region, are subject to two separate quality control procedures.

The first requires re-reading of one in seven of all negative readings; the second involves a continuous computerised monitoring of all smear test results to check whether an individual screener is recording more positive or negative results than would normally be expected.

The consultant pathologist in charge of the laboratory is responsible for all quality control checks which are applied to all smea. tests referred to Christie hospital. The checks currently being carried out by independent advisers on a number of slides submitted by North Staffordshire district health authority are being undertaken as a matter of urgency and are likely to be completed in five to six weeks.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce guidelines, with clear advice to those called upon to inspect nursing and residential homes, to the effect that they are required to make specific checks to ensure that the personal liberties of residents have not been infringed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The code of practice for residential care, "Home Life", and the "Handbook for Health Authorities: Registration and Inspection of Nursing Homes", which complement the Registered Homes Act 1984 and the associated regulations give registration authorities detailed guidance including advice on the rights of residents and on respect for residents' dignity and autonomy.

In his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on 12 July, at columns 169-70, my right hon. Friend announced further steps being taken to strengthen the registration process including the rights of residents.

We have commissioned distance-learning material for the training of the registration and inspection staff of local authorities and health authorities, which will deal with these issues.

Individual registration authorities are statutorily responsible for deciding within the general guidance precisely how the various aspects of care are examined in individual establishments.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the impact on adult family placement schemes of restrictions on the operation of unregistered residential homes.

Mr. Portillo: Regulations were introduced in July 1987 with respect to small unregistered residential care homes.

This was aimed at ensuring that the higher limits of income support applicable to registered residential care homes were payable only where the small home or placement provides, at increased cost, standards of care clearly equivalent to those to be found in registered homes.

We have received a number of inquiries including approximately 25 from hon. Members.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average annual cost to the local authority of (a) registering, and (b) inspecting a private or voluntary residential home under the provisions of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Currie: A study during 1987 by the Department's social services inspectorate and the social work service of the Welsh Office found it impracticable to calculate the average annual cost of registering or inspecting a home. The study team calculated the unit cost of the principal activities involved in this work for the authorities in the field work sample as follows:

Initial registration application[1]	539
Change of owner	528
Registration of manager	147
Inspection	26·23

[1] Excluding inquiries prior to application.

A copy of the study team's report, entitled "The Registered Homes Act 1984: Study of Local Authority Costs 1987" is in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average annual cost to a health authority of (a) registering and (b) inspecting a private nursing home under the provisions of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Currie: The estimated average cost of registering and inspecting private nursing homes is broadly reflected in the annual charges levied by health authorities. I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on 12 July, at columns 169-70 for details of revised charges from 1 August 1988.

Child Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that all local authorities are identifying those children in their care in need of long-term substitute family care and those who might benefit from being adopted in accordance with the provisions of the Adoption Act 1976.

Mrs. Currie: In reaching any decision relating to a child in their care, local authorities have a statutory duty to give first consideration to the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of the child throughout childhood; and to consider the child's wishes and feelings about any decision, having regard to age and understanding.

Sections 1 and 2 of the Adoption Act 1976 which came into force in January 1988 require all local authorities to establish and maintain an adoption service and to provide the necessary facilities or arrange for them to be provided by approved adoption societies. Adoption services are to be provided in conjunction with approved adoption societies and with the local authority's other social services for children and families. This full integration of adoption into the mainstream of services for children should help to ensure that adoption is properly considered where it would be in the best interests of a child and that the necessary facilities are available so that the best choice can be made for each child and family, whether this is support for the natural family, long term foster care or adoption.

Since December 1985 custodianship has offered a further option for children needing the security of a permanent substitute family.

Charitable Fund Raising

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate for the annual sum contributed to the National Health Service as a result of charitable fund raising.

Mr. Newton: In 1986-87, the latest available year for which information is available, the total income received by health authorities in England from subscriptions, donations and fund raising efforts was £55 million.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88;

(2) what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material;

(3) what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89;

(4) what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of his Department.

Mr. Moore: My Department has no section which can be separately identified as public relations. Functions which are commonly associated with public relations are carried out by the Department's information division.

On 1 July 1988 Information Division had the following staff in post:

	Number
Professional Staff	33
Administrative Staff	42
Total	75

Provisional figures for spending by information division in the year 1987-88 as follows:

Manpower	1,084,000
Advertising and other paid publicity activities	21,148,000

Estimated expenditure in the 1988-89 financial year is as follows:

Manpower	1,123,000
Publicity	20,466,000

Estimated expenditure on publicity is broken down as follows:

Television Advertising	3,465,000
Radio Advertising	None
Newspaper Advertising	1,603,000
Other promotional material	15,398,000

Homeless People

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the numbers of single homeless who have applied for and received a crisis loan payment since April 1988; and if he will estimate how many of the single homeless received an urgent needs payment in the three months prior to April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce a system of guaranteed payments to ensure that hostels providing accommodation for the single homeless receive the lodging charge promptly and direct rather than owed to them in arrears.

Mr. Portillo: We are continuing to monitor the operation of the reformed scheme, but have no plans to introduce a system of guaranteed payments of income support. Entitlement is based on a detailed examination of each claimant's circumstances.

Provisions already exist to pay income support in respect of accommodation charges automatically to hostels run by voluntary organisations which provide facilities for alcoholics or drug addicts or which are akin to DHSS resettlement units.

Direct payments can also be made where there is evidence that the claimant has failed to budget for accommodation charges and in the opinion of the adjudication officer it is in the best interest of his family.

WALES

Conwy Tunnel Road Scheme

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is now being made on the Conwy tunnel road scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Work on the four and a half year Conwy crossing contract commenced in November 1986 and is generally progressing satisfactorily. Major excavations and earthworks are well advanced and construction of the concrete tunnel units has begun. Some variation to expected ground conditions has been encountered, but it is not expected that this will delay the scheme unduly.

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the perinatal mortality rate for each year since 1968, by area authority.

Mr. Grist: Perinatal mortality rates for (a) the Welsh hospital board area (that is Wales) 1968 to 1973, for (b) area health authorities 1974 to 1981 and for (c) district health authorities 1982 to 1987 are given in the tables:

Taff Estuary Barrage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology's report entitled "The Effect of the Taff Estuary Barrage on Over-Wintering Shorebirds."

Mr. Grist: A copy of the report is already available in the Library of the House.

ADAS

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the present state of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service at Trawscoed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 21 July 1988]: Trawsgoed is the headquarters of the farm and countryside service in Wales. I have no plans to review that situation.

Organic Farming

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on support for organic farming in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 18 July 1988]: Those farming organically benefit from the various agricultural support measures in the same way as other farmers, including the practical assistance given by various bodies to improve the marketing of Welsh food. In addition, the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service is equipping itself to respond to demands for specialised advice. The board of the United Kingdom register of organic food standards is also getting our full support in the task of setting standards for organic production, which is essential if organic production is to achieve its potential.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices open in each year from 1979 to the latest available date, indicating the number of full-time and part-time offices and where mergers have taken place, along with the relevant year's official unemployment count.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is as follows:

[1] Information not available in the form requested.
[2] Information not available.
Note: Information on unemployment benefit offices for earlier years is not available in the form requested because records were only kept on premises occupied.

No unemployment benefit offices and jobcentres have been merged. In just over 70 locations new working arrangements are being piloted to determine the most effective way to bring together services offered by jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices.

Details of the official unemployment count for each year are published in the Department of Employment's "Employment Gazette", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total spending by his Department on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mr. Cope [holding reply Thursday 21 July]: The total spending on press and public relations by my Department in 1987-88 was £1·16 million. The total spending on advertising by my Department to promote departmental objectives in 1987-88 was £13·1 million.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Cope [holding reply Thursday 21 July]: The total estimated expenditure by my Department in 1988-89 on publicity is £17·8 million. It includes publicity expenditure on behalf of the employment service. It is not possible at the present time to provide the detailed breakdown by the media groups requested.

Manpower Services Commission (Advertising)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total spending by the Manpower Services Commission on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88.

Mr. Cope [holding reply Thursday 21 July]: The total expenditure for 1987-88 by the Training Commission—formerly Manpower Services Commission—on press and public relations was £1,138,200. Total expenditure on advertising was £24,298,000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Manpower Services Commission on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Cope [holding reply Thursday 21 July]: The latest estimated spending 1988-89 by the Training Commission —formerly Manpower Services Commission—is as follows:

	£ million
Advertising
Television	8·4
Radio	—
Press	[1]4·4
Other promotional activities	6·4
TOTAL	19·2

[1] Includes a small amount of radio advertising. This cannot be separately identified.

Manpower Services Commission (Public Relations)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Cope [holding reply Thursday 21 July]: There are 71 members of staff currently employed in the information services branch (including the press office) of the Training Commission (formerly the Manpower Services Commission).

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by the Manpower Services Commission on press and public relations during 1988-89.

Mr. Cope [holding reply Thursday 21 July]: The estimated expenditure for 1988-89 by the Training Commission (formerly MSC) on press and public relations is £1,135,200. This figure represents general administrative expenditure relating to costs for staff, running costs and for regional services.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which Customs controls at Waterloo station will cause significant delays to Channel tunnel passengers.

Mr. Lilley: It is envisaged that Customs controls at Waterloo will be based on the quick and effective red/green channel system used currently at major airports. The vast majority of passengers will pass through Customs without stopping.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why Customs controls will not be carried out on board Channel tunnel trains bound for Waterloo.

Mr. Brooke: It is intended that Customs controls should be carried out at Waterloo for trains terminating there because this would be less costly and more effective than on-train controls and less disruptive to passengers who might be separated from their baggage on the train. In practice the vast majority of passengers will pass straight through the Waterloo Customs clearance hall without any delay at all.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table on the functional analysis of United Kingdom public expenditure, modelled on table 2.7 of Cm. 288-I, showing charges netted against each line for each of the years 1982-83 to 1990-91.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the departmental breakdown of charges in respect of programme expenditure that I gave him on 27 May 1988, at columns 375-76. The detailed functional analysis requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Net Overseas Assets

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to his reply of 13 July, Official Report, column 198, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) he will estimate the sterling value of the United Kingdom's net overseas assets at (a) 30 June 1987 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Estimates of the value of the United Kingdom's net overseas assets are available only for the end of each year. The latest CSO Pink book (United Kingdom Balance of Payments), published in August 1987, included a figure for the end-1986 of £114·4 billion. The 1988-89 Financial Statement and Budget Report included a provisional estimate for end-1987 of some £90 billion.

COI (Advertising)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total expenditure on advertising by the Central Office of Information in 1987-88; and what is the estimated expenditure for the current year.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 July 1988]: Expenditure by the Central Office of Information on advertising on behalf of other Government Departments in 1987-88 was £87·7 million. Estimated expenditure on advertising through the COI for 1988-89 is a matter for departmental Ministers.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Quality

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received a report from the Anglian water authority regarding the effect of the extension of the Southend on Sea sewage outfall in the quality of river water generally; and which river has seen any increase in levels of pollution off Canvey Island's beaches.

Mr. Moynihan: Anglian water authority submitted to the Department in 1986 a consultant's report describing the effects of the Southend outfall extension on water quality, as part of its application under the Control of Pollution Act for discharge consent. The studies which were carried out showed that the waters at the eastern end of Canvey Island would not be significantly affected by extending the outfall. However, Anglian water authority has undertaken to monitor the effects on Canvey beach of extending the outfall and will make the results available to the local authority.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the arrangements for continuous monitoring of all sewage outfalls and beaches in the Thames estuary.

Mr. Moynihan: The arrangements for continuous monitoring of all sewage outfalls and bathing waters in the Thames estuary are matters for the respective water authorities. Records are not kept centrally, but the individual results are available through the public registers.

Harassment of Tenants (Warrington-Runcorn)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the Warrington-Runcorn development corporation of harassment of new town tenants by certain Warrington borough councillors; and if he will make a statement on the implications for his housing policy.

Mrs. Roe: I understand that the local authority has campaigned against the decision by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to make an agency agreement with a group of housing associations.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the number of extra houses he considers the city of Durham will need as a result of economic development in the next few years.

Mrs. Roe: The Secretary of State has made no such estimate. In May 1986 Durham county council submitted proposals for alterations to the county structure plan to the Secretary of State, and these included provision for 3,000 new dwellings in the city of Durham district between 1983 and 1996.

The Secretary of State's proposed modifications to the alterations were published on 22 July 1988 and he does not propose to make any changes to this level of provision.

Council House Sales

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many of the cases under the right-to-buy legislation referred to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), by the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate since June 1987 the London borough of Camden has been in default of compliance with the time limits set down in legislation.

Mrs. Roe: Since June 1987 my hon. Friend has referred to me some 90 cases of delay being experienced by tenants of the London borough of Camden seeking to exercise their right to buy. It is likely that the council failed in most of these cases to meet the statutory time limits for serving notices admitting or denying the right to buy or setting out the terms of sale.

Water Charge

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the community water charge will be payable by (a) students, (b) student nurses, (c) families on income support and (d) senior citizens on retirement pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: There is no proposal to introduce a community water charge in England.

Land (Maintenance)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to give new powers to local authorities to force landowners, public and private, to tidy up and maintain land they own.

Mr. Trippier: Section 65 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 (as substituted by the Housing and Planning Act 1986) enables local authorities to require owners and occupiers to remedy the condition of any land which is adversely affecting the amenity of the area.

Industrial Dereliction (Stoke on Trent)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent of industrial dereliction in Stoke-on-Trent; if he will increase resources accordingly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The last survey of derelict land in England carried out in 1982 showed there to be 312 hectares of derelict land in Stoke-on-Trent. Since then the city council has received derelict land grants totalling some £12·6 million towards schemes designed to bring derelict land back into use.

A new survey of derelict land in England is being undertaken which will show the current extent of dereliction in the city. This information will be taken into account when considering the future level of resources to be made available for the area.

Derelict Land

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase resources allocated to programmes such as derelict land grants and small clearance grants dedicated to bringing waste land into use and improving its appearance.

Mr. Trippier: The resources available for bringing derelict and other land back into use have already been greatly increased. Funds for derelict land grant have been increased by 80 per cent. in real terms since 1979-80 and the urban development corporations have available further substantial resources for reclamation.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take action to reclaim waste land for green and soft end uses as a means of improving the image of run down areas; and if he can provide funds accordingly.

Mr. Trippier: Derelict land grant is available in England for the reclamation and improvement of derelict and neglected or unsightly land. Resources of £77·4 million have been made available for 1988-89. While the main priority for the use of derelict land grant will be schemes designed to reclaim inner-city land for private sector development, funds are available for schemes with green and soft end uses, particularly where such schemes will encourage investment and economic activity within areas of extensive or concentrated dereliction, through the creation of a more attractive environment.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make policies for the re-use of unused land a central feature of county development plans.

Mr. Trippier: We have long emphasised to local planning authorities that it is essential that the planning system, including development plans, should continue to identify and realise the development potential of unused, neglected or derelict land within existing urban areas. This helps to protect the countryside and assists in urban regeneration. The advice has been most recently set out in our planning policy guidance notes 3 and 4, published in January this year, which deal with housing and industrial and commercial development respectively.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is prepared to enlarge the registers of publicly owned unused land to include sites in the ownership of other public bodies and the private sector.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, county by county, the amount of land and the number of sites lying vacant, dormant, unused and derelict in total in Britain's urban areas and the proportion of this land in private ownership.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available exactly in the form requested. The tables list, county by county, the amount of derelict land in England's urban areas recorded in the derelict land survey of 1982, the proportion of this land in private ownership, and the amount of land on the registers of under used publicly owned land in urban programme districts. The Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales deal with derelict land in their respective countries. The land registers do not record land in private ownership. They cover 19 of the 37 districts in Wales, but the legislation does not apply to Scotland.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission research and institute a land audit to be carried out by local councils to produce comprehensive statistics on vacant and dormant land on a regular basis.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is mounting a series of pilot studies with Ordnance Survey to examine ways of identifying vacant land in urban areas, its size and its type. Any decision on the collection and publication of vacant land statistics on a regular basis must wait until these pilot studies have been completed.

A comprehensive land audit would place an unacceptable burden on local authorities.

World Commission on Environment and Development

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he intends to take in response to the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development.

Mr. Ridley: We gave an immediate and warm response to the world commission's report, "Our Common Future", when it was launched in London in April 1987. Since then we have offered consistent support, particularly in the United Nations General Assembly debate last October, to the report's call for sustainable development.

At last month's economic summit in Toronto the Prime Minister and her summit colleagues formally endorsed this message. We have now prepared and published today a more detailed examination of the report's recommendations in what we are calling a United Kingdom perspective. This perspective, produced by my Department in full co-operation with other interested Departments of State, represents this Government's views on the many complex environmental issues analysed in the report.

In her foreword the Prime Minister writes:

"It is intended to inform interested organisations and individuals at home, and to stimulate further international consideration of the Report, notably within the OECD and the United Nations. I see it also as a contribution to the Ministerial Conference which the Norwegian Government will hold in 1990 to examine what progress we have all made to safeguard 'Our Common Future'".

Copies of the perspective have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Water Metering

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the water metering trial in the Isle of Wight division of the Southern water authority is to be financed.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 July 1988]: The approved costs of the Isle of Wight metering trial will be split equally between the Government and the Southern water authority, subject to a maximum figure, set annually, on the Government's contribution.

Urban Programme

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when submissions from Bradford college, concerning funding under the urban programme of community group courses, were received by his Department; when decisions will be taken on funding submissions; if he will make it his policy to ensure that approval is made earlier in subsequent years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 July 1988]: These submissions were received on 7 April as part of Bradford's inner area programme. This was unsatisfactory and a revised programme submission was received on 30 June. This is under consideration and I expect to be able to announce a decision in the near future. Early approval of inner area programme is dependent upon the timing and quality of submission by the local authority.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the class subjects specified in submissions made by Bradford for funds under the urban programme to support community training and education.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 July 1988]: The information requested is listed in the table:

Counselling

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant was approved for Bradford community education and training under the urban programme for the period January 1987 to March 1988; and how much grant was applied for the year April 1988 to March 1989.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 July 1988]: January 1987 to March 1988, £1,018,000. April 1988 to March 1989, £570,000.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many students are currently attending courses in Bradford funded under the urban programme; how many tutors are currently employed on these courses; how many centres are involved; how many centres provide creche facilities; how many creche workers are employed; and how many children use creche facilities.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 July 1988]: This information is not held by the Department.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about delays in his Department's approval under the urban programme of the Bradford college contact club; and when he intends to announce his decision on the funding of the club for the current year.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 July 1988]: I have received no representations. This project is being considered within the context of Bradford's inner area programme as a whole. I expect to be able to announce a decision in the near future.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 19 July 1988]: The list of achievements provided to my hon. Friend last July can be updated as follows:

Published a new series of Planning Policy Guidance notes, and a parallel series of Minerals Planning Guidance notes which provide concise and practical guidance on planning policies, in clearer and more accessible form than in earlier Departmental circulars and other official publications. These include a Planning Policy Guidance note on industrial and commercial development and small firms.

Introduced revised enquiries procedure rules which should help to speed up planning appeals involving enquiries.

Simplified outdoor advertisement control.

Brought back into use or disposed of unused public land on the land registers. This increased to 12,100 acres in 1987 compared with the revised 1986 figure of 9,200 acres.

Enabled local authorities to provide financial assistance for privately let housing accommodation (Local Government Act 1988) and recently increased the maximum amount of assistance to between 50 per cent. and 75 per cent. depending on area.

The Housing Bill currently before Parliament proposes to deregulate rents on new lettings. This will allow landlords to obtain a competitive return on their investment.

Provided for increased competition in the provision of certain local authority services under the Local Government Act 1988.

Encouraged the more effective provision of assistance to small firms in rural areas through the creation of the Rural Development Commission (formerly the Development Commission and CoSIRA).

The Rural Development Commission spent £30 million in 1987-88, compared with Development Commission expenditure of £27·5 million in 1986-87, from which they funded provision of 177,443 square feet of factory space by English Estates (with a further 286,008 square feet under construction at the end of the year) and 63 factories built in partnership with local authorities. Approval was given for 336 redundant building grants, and other help and advice was given to over 19,000 client firms, who were thereby enabled to attract over £20 million in loans from the private sector. The Department uses these and a range of other performance indicators to monitor the Commission's operations.

Established three new Urban Development Corporations— Sheffield, Leeds and Central Manchester— and extended the Black Country Development Corporation. Subject to parliamentary approval a further UDC will be established in Bristol and the Merseyside Development Corporation extended.

Provided the following assistance under the Urban Programme:

In 1987-88 £19·6 million Urban Programme expenditure was allocated to the provision of new or converted industrial units for small firms. This compared with £11·6 million allocated in 1986-87. Many of these units are small (less than 2,500 square feet) and in areas where the private sector is unwilling to make such provision.

Support is also given to preparatory works such as reclamation and assembly of sites, intended to make land available for industrial development by the private sector. £9·3 million was allocated to this in 1987-88 compared to £6·6 million in 1986-87.

In addition, expenditure on highway access works to assist development accounted for £7·8 million in 1987-88 compared to £6·2 million in 1986-87.

Direct loans and grants to firms chiefly to help with high inner city land and building costs and to businesses in Commercial and Industrial Improvement Areas accounted for £12 million in 1987-88 compared to £9·8 million in 1986-87.

General environmental projects to improve physical conditions and raise private sector confidence accounted for £6·8 million in 1987-88 compared to £4·6 million in 1986-87.

Advisory services to small businesses accounted for £3·9 million in 1987-88 compared to £5·1 million in 1986-87, and additional miscellaneous expenditure on business promotion, trade fairs, tourism, etc. accounted for £6·1 million in 1987-88 compared to £5 million in 1986-87.

The Department monitors this expenditure through a range of performance indicators. Performance against these measures is set out in detail in the annual reports on the urban programme published by this Department. The annual report on urban programme expenditure in 1986-87 is currently available free of charge from my Department. The annual report for 1987-88 is due to be published towards the end of this year.

The effect of urban programme assistance on small firms cannot always be separately identified. However, research evidence shows assistance is targeted closely on small firms, particularly those employing less than ten people.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chile

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Santiago regarding (a) the medical student Mauricio Guyaley, arrested and tortured, (b) Maria Elena Valeuzuela student of obstetrics, arrested and tortured, and (c) Cristiau Banaza, student of occupational therapy, arrested by the police in Santiago on 12 July.

Mr. Mellor: We understand from Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago that all three students were arrested during a violent demonstration on 11 July. They have been seen by the dean of the faculty of medicine at Santiago university, who has reported that they are in good health. We understand that there have been no allegations of torture.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago has joined the Spanish and French embassies in making representations to the Government in Chile about the arrest and torture of university students.

Mr. Mellor: We understand from Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago, which we asked to make urgent inquiries, that the French and Spanish embassies have made no representations about these arrests. We understand that there have been no allegations of torture.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will approach other European Community Governments in order to discuss a common approach to the future elections in Chile after the events of last week in Santiago.

Mr. Mellor: On 18 July 1988 the Foreign Ministers of the 12 members of the European Community issued the following statement:

"The Twelve reiterate their hope for an early and orderly restoration of democracy in Chile and recall their attachment to free and democratic elections in that country, as expressed in their declaration of 9 October 1987. They are convinced that restoration of democracy in Chile would contribute to strengthening civilian rule and stability in Latin America.

Taking note of the forthcoming plebiscite, the Twelve wish to stress the need for all measures to be taken so that the campaign be conducted and the vote take place in a way guaranteeing the free expression of the people's will and in a climate free of violence and intimidation.

In particular, the Twelve believe that for the proper conduct of the plebiscite it is essential that the Chilean Government without delay lifts the states of exception, restores political liberties, respects human rights and ensures freedom of information and opinion.

South Africa

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 618, if Her Majesty's ambassador in South Africa is intending to try to visit Mr. Nelson Mandela in the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to urge the South African Government to release Mr. Nelson Mandela immediately and unconditionally. All our efforts are designed to secure that objective. The South African Government are well aware of our views.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what urgent action is to be taken to repatriate to the United Kingdom the British citizens Carol Ann Roberts and her daughter Julie Rota Boyd who are stranded in Sekunda, South Africa without funds.

Mr. Mellor: Repatriation is not a statutory right and Mrs. Roberts and her daughter do not meet the normal criteria under which it is granted. Mr. Roberts left his wife and step-daughter in South Africa when he decided, for his own reasons, to return to the United Kingdom with his son in June. He has now recognised his obligations to his family and is in the process of raising funds for their return to this country.

Burmah Endeavour

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department received any direct warning from Iraq that the British registered vessel, the Burmah Endeavour, was liable to attack in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. A report in a French newspaper about four British registered ships, including the Burmah Endeavour, operating in the Iranian advice zone as ferries and storage vessels for Iranian oil was drawn to the attention of officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 10 May by the Iraqi ambassador. It was also raised with the British ambassador in Baghdad on 12 May.

The Iraqi approaches did not constitute a warning of imminent attack. Nor did we have any indication from other sources of such an attack.

The MOD and the Department of Transport were informed of the Iraqi approaches. They in turn, contacted the General Council of British Shipping, the established channel of communication in such circumstances, and through it the owners of the vessels concerned.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Birmingham Polytechnic (Graphic Design)

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to graphic design, Birmingham polytechnic to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 21 November to Friday 25 November.

Student Unions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those student unions which will be investigated by his Department during the current review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those (a) colleges and (b) universities which will be investigated by his Department during the current review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the estimated cost of his Department's review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will outline his Department's programme concerning the current review of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have written to my hon. Friend.

Cayley and Flight (Exhibition)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Cayley and Flight" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 14 November to Friday 18 November.

Interim Holding Committee

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions will be asked to continue for a second year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Yes. I shall in the autumn invite the Interim Advisory Committee to make recommendations on school teachers' pay and conditions for the year beginning 1 April 1989. I am glad to say that Lord Chilver has agreed to chair the committee for a second year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Pending Trials

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases are currently awaiting trial in (a) the Court of Appeal and (b) the Divisional Court; and what were the equivalent figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987.

The Attorney-General: The available information is summarised in the table:

	Court of Appeal
	Criminal Division	Civil Division	Queen's Bench Divisional Court
End—June 1988	2,963	800	973
End—Year 1987	2,943	827	1,164
End—Year 1986	2,841	891	—
End—Year 1985	2,657	878	—

Notes:
Figures for the Court of Appeal Criminal Division include both applications for leave to appeal and appeals.
Figures for the Court of Appeal Civil Division include both final and interlocutory appeals.
Figures for the Divisional Court include applications for leave and cases to be determined by a single judge or by the full court. Such figures are not available for 1985 and 1986.

Gazumping

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire, Official Report, 30 June, column 295, what evidence he has of the level of support from solicitors and other professional advisers for the changes in conveyancing practice identified by the Law Commission's standing committee to help reduce the practice of gazumping.

The Attorney-General: There are no available figures to indicate the level of support for these changes in conveyancing practice. These changes were identified by the conveyancing standing committee only last year, and it is too early to judge their effect.

Legal Aid Board

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many times the new Legal Aid Board has met.

The Attorney-General: I understand that there have been three board meetings so far, and that the board is also working through sub-committees, which meet approximately weekly.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Service Posts (Privatisation)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Prime Minister whether, at the meeting held on 18 February with the general secretaries of the Civil Service trade unions, Government plans for the privatisation of civil service posts were discussed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The purpose of the meeting of Civil Service trade union leaders with the head of the Home Civil Service and senior colleagues on 18 February was to tell them of the Government's decision, which I announced to the House that day, to accept the main recommendations of the efficiency unit's report "Improving Management in Government: The Next Steps".

It was made clear at the meeting that the "Next Steps" initiative is separate from privatisation. The Government will maintain their privatisation policy, but "Next Steps" is primarily about those activities which are carried out within Government.

Sir Alan Walters

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she has had with Sir Alan Walters about his possible reappointment as her economic adviser and as to the salary and terms of any such appointment.

The Prime Minister: There have been discussions with Sir Alan Walters about his returning as my economic adviser, but the details have not been settled.

Economic Advisers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list (a) her economic advisers and (b) the heads of her policy unit since 1979, and the salary and terms under which they were appointed.

The Prime Minister: The salaries payable on appointment from public funds of the officials concerned were as follows:

Economic adviser
Professor Alan Walters	28,500
Heads of the policy unit
Mr. J. Hoskyns	16,780
Mr. W. F. R. Mount	23,022
Mr. J. Redwood	[1]
Professor B. Griffiths	48,500

[1] On secondment.

Apart from the one secondment from the private sector, all were appointed under the terms which apply to special advisers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Estate Agents Act

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action has been taken since the Office of Fair Trading report, in February 1987, to deal with problems arising out of the operation of the Estate Agents Act.

Mr. Butcher: The major problem identified by the Office of Fair Trading in the course of its monitoring of the Estate Agents Act has been section 18 of the Act, on which I continue to await with interest the outcome of legal proceedings between the office and the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors.

I shall consider the other issues identified by the OFT in the light of discussions which I am currently having with the major estate agency bodies.

Quality Assurance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report, from the register of quality assessed United Kingdom companies held by his Department (a) companies on the register with an address in Coventry, (b) the quality assurance defence standard, or standards, to which they have been assessed, (c) the months in which they were last assessed and (d) the respective product area assessed.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. A copy of the register is in the Library of the House.

Research Establishments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to meet Civil Service trade unions to discuss the review of his Department's research establishments.

Mr. Butcher: DTI officials met the departmental trade union side on 20 June to discuss the review. A decision on the proposal to develop the National Engineering Laboratory within the private sector will be taken once bids have been appraised. Until then there are no plans to meet the Civil Service trade unions.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the total spending by the Duchy and Department of Trade and Industry, respectively, on press, public relations and advertising, respectively, in 1987-88;

(2) what is the latest figure for the estimated expenditure by the Duchy office and Department of Trade and Industry, respectively, on press and public relations during 1988-89;

(3) what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Duchy office and Department of Trade and Industry, respectively, on (a) television advertising (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, and (d) other promotional material.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 21 July 1988]: The latest estimated expenditure by my Department on press and public relations in 1987-88 and 1988-89 is as follows. There is no separate expenditure on behalf of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

	1987-88 £	1988-89 £
Press and public relations	1,155,000	1,425,000

Expenditure by my Department on advertising in 1987-88 was £9,139,000. The latest expenditure to date in 1988-89 by my Department on advertising and other promotional material is as follows. There has been no expenditure on radio advertising since 1 April. Detailed decisions on expenditure for the remainder of the year have yet to be taken. There is no separate expenditure on behalf of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

	1988-89 Expenditure to end June 1988 £
Television advertising	6,708,000
Newspaper advertising	1,745,000
Other promotional material including posters	2,277,000
Total	10,730,000

Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of the Duchy office and Department of Trade and Industry, respectively.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 21 July 1988]: The latest figure for the number of staff presently employed in the press and public relations office of my Department is 41 (including 16 on clerical and other support duties). There are no separate staff employed on behalf of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Textile Imports

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is yet in a position to invoke the safeguard clause in the EEC/Turkey agreement governing textile imports due to the effects on the West Yorkshire textile industry arising from imports of acrylic fibre yarn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 21 July 1988]: Imports of Turkish acrylic yarn have fallen sharply in the first five months of this year compared with the same period last year, and the safeguard clause is not applicable. However, an anti-dumping application from the industry is under consideration by the EC Commission.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Short Brothers plc

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans are being made for the privatisation of Short Brothers plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made to the House on 21 July.

MacBride Principles

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those whom his Department has directly or indirectly assisted, including representatives from the Fair Employment Agency, trades unions and other individuals or agencies, including Government Departments, to give evidence to legislatures in the United States of America considering adopting or who have adopted the MacBride principles; what was the overall financial cost and number of separate visits in each case; and if he will place in the Library copies of any transcripts or evidence submitted by the Fair Employment Agency or other officials in each case.

Mr. Viggers: Since June 1985 to date the overall cost of assistance to individuals to give evidence has been £86,856. I do not propose to identify the individuals concerned.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months compared with the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 19 July 1988]: The principal Northern Ireland vehicle for strengthening the small firm sector is the Local Enterprise Development Unit, Northern Ireland's small business agency. The unit can offer a wide range of selective assistance by grants and loans to new and expanding firms with up to 50 employees. During 1987-88 offers were made to 873 projects promoting 4,570 jobs, a small increase on the previous year's level of 4,543 jobs. In addition to the number of jobs assisted, the unit's main performance indicators are cost per job and percentage contribution to total project costs. Over the past three years these have shown the following trends:

	Cost per job (£)	Contribution (per cent.)
1985-86	4,890	38
1986-87	4,532	36
1987-88	4,520	35

A most encouraging initiative is the local enterprise programme, under which more than 30 community-based, business-led groups are being assisted to contribute to the economic regeneration of their areas. At present, 18 local enterprise centres are operational, providing accommodation and common services to over 500 new small businesses employing nearly 1,000 people. When complete, the network of centres will have the potential to accommodate businesses with up to 3,000 employees in total.

The stimulation of enterprise is being greatly assisted by the work of the Northern Ireland small business institute based at the University of Ulster, a successful marriage of academia, the private and public sectors, providing a range of training and developmental services to new and existing entrepreneurs. The institute's programmes include two aimed specifically at harnessing the talents of young graduates—the graduates enterprise programme encouraging graduates to establish their own businesses and the graduate attachment programme encouraging small firms to utilise the skills of those with good qualifications in developing their businesses. Both programmes are successful in terms of those who go on to set up their own enterprises or are employed in key positions by small firms. The Government have also recognised the need for greater awareness among small companies of the opportunities that exist both in export markets and as suppliers to public authorities and major private sector undertakings.

A series of exhibitions and seminars are being held involving the central unit of purchasing (Northern Ireland), LEDU; the Industrial Development Board and national and local undertakings; to date some 2,500 local companies have attended. In the export field the Industrial Development Board's trade mission and fairs programme attracted a record 223 participants in overseas missions and trade fairs during 1988. The structure of Northern Ireland industry is such that the greater majority of firms employ fewer than 200 people, so that the effect of national policies for stimulating enterprise and reducing the burdens upon business will be enjoyed mainly by smaller businesses.

ACE Funds

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on the withdrawal of ACE funds to community projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 21 July 1988]: A number of organisations and individuals have made representations regarding the withdrawal of ACE funding to community groups, and full consideration has been given to the individual circumstances of each case. I remain satisfied that the present arrangements ensure that ACE funding goes to those bodies that are in the best position to provide services for disadvantaged groups.

Tyrone Crystal Ltd.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the total grants received by Tyrone Crystal since its inception, detailing how much grants were received in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 21 July 1988]: The amount paid in selective assistance and standard capital grants to Tyrone Crystal Ltd. since it was acquired by the Dungannon and District Co-operative Enterprises Ltd. in 1980 is £774,009.

In the years 1985, 1986 and 1987, the amounts were:

1985	232,004
1986	168,372
1987	263,755

In addition, the company has received assistance under various training grants schemes operated by the Department.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Jamaican Citizens

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of Jamaica (a) have sought entry to the United Kingdom as passengers since January 1987, (b) were refused entry on arrival in each month since January 1987 and (c) made applications in Jamaica for entry certificates in each month since January 1987; and what proportions of applications at (c) were granted or refused entry.

Mr. Renton: The following table gives, for each month from January 1987 to the latest available, the numbers of citizens of Jamaica admitted to the United Kingdom and the numbers refused entry and removed. In 1987 a total of 3,099 applications in Jamaica for entry clearance to the United Kingdom were granted (initially or on appeal) and 710 were refused initially; monthly data and the other information requested are not available centrally.

Jamaican citizens (a) given leave to enter the United Kingdom and (b) refused leave to enter and removed

Staff-prisoner Ratios

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the ratios of (a) governor and prison officer grades, and (b) other civilian grades, per inmate; what were the equivalent figures 10 years ago; and what corresponding information he has for equivalent services in other European Community countries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 1 January 1988 the ratios were (a) 1:2·27 and (b) 1:5·49 taking into account all prison service staff including those at headquarters and regional offices. The equivalent figures on 1 January 1978 were (a) 1:2·50 and (b) 1:6·74. We have no corresponding information for equivalent services in other European Community countries.

Fire Fighting (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often practice of fire-fighting procedures takes place in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Governors have been advised that subject to any overriding security or control considerations, a fire practice should be held at least once in six months. Procedures are also practised ad hoc as part of the training of those allocated to fire duties.

Death Penalty

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received concerning the re-introduction of the death penalty since June 1987; how many supported restoration and how many were opposed; what percentage the latter is to the former; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We receive many letters about capital punishment and most of those who write to us are in favour of restoring the death penalty. Precise figures are not available.

Offences by Children

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to allow the courts to require parents to bear financial responsibility for offences committed by their children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from him on 24 March, at column 183.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received concerning parents being financially responsible for offences committed by their children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: So far in 1988 the Home Office has received about 30 letters suggesting that parents should be made responsible for offences committed by their children.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children and young persons were found guilty of (a) vandalism, (b) offences against the person and (c) public order offences in each year since 1983;

(2) how many children and young persons were cautioned by a senior police officer for (a) vandalism, (b) offences against the person and (c) public order offences in each year since 1983.

Mr. John Patten: Such information is published annually in volume 4 of the supplementary tables to "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library. The information is at tables S4.1(A) and S4.1(B) for persons found guilty and tables S4.1(C) and S4.1(D) for persons cautioned.

Crime Circular

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the Home Office consolidated circular to the police on crime and kindred matters;

(2) if he will make available to all public libraries the Home Office consolidated circular to the police on crime and kindred matters.

Mr. Douglas Hogg We have no plans to publish the consolidated circular or to make it more widely available than it is at present. It is a compendium of unclassified guidance already issued in individual numbered Home Office circulars, which are routinely distributed to a number of libraries and academic institutions. Copies of these circulars and a list of current circulars are also distributed to local authorities, which are responsible for the management of public libraries.

The codes of practice made under section 66 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which are incorporated in the consolidated circular, are separately published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Copies are in the Library.

Badgers

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning greater protection for badgers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to outlaw badger baiting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government share the widely expressed public abhorrence against cruelty to badgers. In the last four to six weeks we have received about 150 letters from hon. Members and about 200 letters from members of the public about it. We are considering those representations, but I must make it clear that cruelty to badgers is already prohibited by law. The baiting of any animal is expressly prohibited by the Protection of Animals Act 1911. The penalty for the offence was doubled, under the Protection of Animals (Penalties) Act 1987, to a fine of up to £2,000 or six months' imprisonment, or both. Further specific protection to the badger was given in the Badgers Act 1973, which was greatly strengthened by amendments made in the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985, which provide that if, in any proceedings for an offence of attempting to kill, injure, or take a badger, there is evidence from which it could reasonably be concluded that at the material time the accused was attempting to kill, injure or take a badger, he shall be presumed to have been attempting to kill, injure or take a badger unless the contrary is shown.

Sentencing Policy

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to monitor the sentencing of black people in each magistrates court and Crown court throughout England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 July 1988]: We are considering ad hoc studies.

DEFENCE

Royal Army Veterinary Corps

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Royal Army Veterinary Corps.

Mr. Freeman: The corps has a viable future and will continue to develop in accordance with defence needs.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimated cost of the Trident programme, inclusive of all associated capital works costs; and if he will make it his policy to include the cost of such works in all future statements of expenditure on the Trident programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 21 January this year, the current estimate for the Trident programme is £9,043 million, at 1987-88 prices and an exchange rate of £1=$1.62. This figure includes the proportion of costs of capital works properly attributable to Trident, as have all total programme cost estimates which have been announced in the past.

Burmah Endeavour

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department received any warning from Iraq that the British registered vessel, the Burmah Endeavour, was liable to attack in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No specific warning of the attack on the Burmah Endeavour off Larak island on 14 May was ever given. However, ships at Larak island have frequently been attacked and Iraq has consistently claimed the right, in defiance of international law, to attack any shipping helping to sustain Iranian economic activity. The Iraqi ambassador in London reiterated this claim at a meeting with Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials on 10 May, mentioning four British ships, including the Burmah Endeavour, which were being used as storage vessels for Iranian oil. His views were firmly rebutted at that meeting. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office passed details of the discussion to my Department, which informed the General Council of British Shipping, the established channel of communication in such cases, before the attack took place.

Home Defence Exercises

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military home defence exercises will be held in the autumn of 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Nine separate military home defence exercises will be held this autumn. The details are as follows:

7 to 11 September: Exercise Autumn Tiger in South East District.

9 to 17 September: Exercise Eastern Shield in Eastern District.

9 to 17 September: Exercise Strong Link in North West District.

23 to 28 September: Exercise Northern Crusade in North East District.

1 to 9 October: Exercise Drake's Drum in South West District.

1 to 9 October: Exercise Capital Guard in London District.

1 to 9 October: Exercise Triple Crown in Wales District.

8 to 15 October: Exercise Western Encounter in Western District.

22 October to 2 November: Exercise Bonnie Dundee in Scotland District.

I have asked the general officers commanding these exercises to ensure that full information about them is made available locally and that hon. Members whose constituencies are involved are invited to watch them. I have also asked the Army district commanders to ensure that there will be minimal disruption to the public. The majority of activities planned to take place outside military establishments and training areas will normally be held in remote areas and with the co-operation of the civil police.

The purpose of these exercises will be to test our current plans for a wide range of home defence operations. It is useful to exercise these plans at a period when international tension in Europe is low, so as to maintain effectiveness and to ensure that, if the need arose, they could be operated successfully in transition to war or war, when home defence would be an essential element of our overall defence capability. The military personnel involved in each exercise will be practising their task of defending installations in the United Kingdom—including, in a few cases, ports, airfields and other operational facilities—that are vital to our defence and to the reinforcement of NATO.

Serving alongside Regular Army personnel, elements of the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force and members of the United States forces based in this country will be volunteers from the Territorial Army, the home service force and individual reservists. I particularly welcome their participation and I am grateful to their employers for releasing them for these important exercises. Their role in tension or war would be a vital one.

I also very much welcome the participation, at various times in these exercises, of a number of non-military organisations, including the police, fire and ambulance services and voluntary aid societies. They, too, would have a vital role in tension or war, and I am most grateful to them for finding the time and resources to take part in these exercises.

These exercises will be the first significant home defence field training since 1985. In that year we held a single, nationally based home defence exercise, Brave Defender. This autumn's exercise will be very different, taking place under separate district command arrangements and designed to test our plans and procedures at a more local level. I hope that all participants, however, will find them a valuable preparation for the next national home defence exercise, Brave Defender 2, which is due to take place in the early 1990s.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

East Craigs Seed Testing Station

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from the trade union movement and local representatives about the future of East Craigs seed testing station, Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Following publication of the report on the plant variety testing and seed certification systems in the United Kingdom for comment, representations have been received from the Institution of Professional Civil Servants at national and local level. Officials have also met the Scottish Office trade union side to discuss the report. The future of East Craigs seed testing station is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the competent authority responsible for assessing the environmental implications of any new afforestation proposals from the Forestry Commission; who decides whether an environmental statement is required; what arrangements will be made for independent scrutiny and what consultations will take place with (a) statutory bodies, (b) non-statutory bodies and (c) Government Departments.

Mr. MacGregor: The Forestry Commission is the competent authority for assessing the environmental implications of afforestation proposals and for deciding whether an environmental statement is required in respect of its own proposals as well as those relating to private land. When an environmental statement is prepared by the Forestry Commission on its own account, it will publicise it and enter into consultations in the same way as for private forestry cases.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Chess Association

Mr. Steel To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the light of his decision to remove the international travel grant from the Scottish Chess Association, he has received any information about other countries, apart from Scotland, having to withdraw from the world olympiad.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer which I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart). I have received no information about countries which have withdrawn from the world olympiad.

Traffic Flow Statistics

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest available traffic flow figures for (a) the M74 junctions 4-5, (b) the M74 junctions 5-6, (c) the M8 junctions 4-5, (d) the M90 junctions 5-6 and (e) the M80 junctions 4-5.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1987 the annual average daily traffic flows, based on factored traffic counts, were:

	Vehicles per day
M74 junctions 4-5	44,637
M74 junctions 5-6	42,336
M8 junctions 4-5	29,128
M90 junctions 5-6	17,944
M80 junctions 4-5	38,115

Children Act 1975

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review section 53 of the Children Act 1975 in so far as it causes a natural parent who has remarried to become an adoptive parent if the new spouse seeks to become an adoptive parent.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Section 53 of the 1975 Act came into force in Scotland on 1 April 1986 and there are at present no plans to review its operation. The requirement that, in these circumstances, a natural parent must become an adoptive parent for the purposes of the adoption process is well established and is designed to safeguard the interests of the child.

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the perinatal mortality rate for each health board in each year since 1968.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is as follows:

Perinatal mortality rates, per 1,000 births (live and still), to health board area, Scotland, 1974 to 1987

Notes:
(1) 1987 figures are provisional.
(2) Comparable information prior to 1974 is not available.
(3) Figures for the smaller health board areas, in particular Orkney, Shetland and Western Isles, are based on small numbers of births and therefore rates vary considerably with small changes in the number of deaths.

Forests

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the anticipated rates of return in each forest district in Scotland for (a) existing Forestry Commission commercial forests and (b) Forestry Commission forests planted between 1987 and 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 July 1988]: The anticipated rate of return on existing forests is not measured by forest districts, because a calculation on that basis would require identifying all past expenditures on each of the existing crops within each district, going back in some cases to the 1920s. However, each forest district is subject to a periodic valuation of existing forests by discounting anticipated expenditure and revenue up to the time of final felling at 3 per cent.

For new planting between 1987 and 1990 the information is as follows:

Forest district	Anticipated rate of return in real terms	Comparative rate of return if only conifers were to be planted
Wester Ross	2·2	2·4

ENERGY

Deregulation and Enterprise

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report on progress made towards the establishment of a deregulation and enterprise section within his Department.

Mr. Parkinson: Since 1985 one section of my Department has had among its responsibilities the general implementation of the proposals in the White Paper

"Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571), published in July of that year. Its aim is to ensure that those in the Department concerned with regulatory activities take appropriate account of the burdens those activities may place on business. But it is not concerned with policy decisions in the area of safety including, for example, offshore safety regulation.

Petroleum Engineering (Safety)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the annual budget of the safety directorate with the petroleum engineering division of his Department in each year from 1979 to date, detailing expenditure on safety engineering inspection and operations, pipelines inspectorate, diving inspectorate, research and development and the safety policy unit.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The safety directorate's staff costs are not separately identifiable. The directorate's budget for reseach and development on offshore safety in 1988-89 is some £6·6 million. Expenditure in previous years is as follows:

Year	£ million
1979-80	4·2
1980-81	4·4
1981-82	5·0
1982-83	4·8
1983-84	4·6
1984-85	4·1
1985-86	6·0
1986-87	6·4
1987-88	5·8

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the annual staffing complement of the safety directorate within the petroleum engineering division of his Department in each year from 1979 to date, detailing personnel levels in the following branches (a) 5A safety engineering, (b) 5B inspection and operations, (c) 6 pipelines inspectorate, (d) 7 diving inspectorate, (e) 8 research and development and (f) safety policy unit.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The number of technical staff in my safety directorate from 1980 to 1988 is set out in the table. Operations and safety are grouped together:

	July 1988	March 1987	October 1985	March 1982	July 1981	June 1980
Operations and Safety	22	23	16	20	19	14
Pipelines inspectorate	9	8	7	7	7	6
Diving inspectorate	6	5	4	5	5	5
Research and Development	7	5	5	4	5	3

The safety policy unit is staffed by three administrative staff. Figures are available only for the dates shown.

Oil Rigs (Safety)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list in the Official Report those safety regulations from which offshore installations are exempt;

(2) what procedures are adopted when consideration is given to exemptions from safety regulations for offshore installations by his Department; and under what statutory authority such exemptions are granted.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Offshore safety regulations apply to all offshore installations. Both the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971 confer powers to exempt installations from all or part of such regulations.

Exemptions are issued only when I am fully satisfied that alternative adequate safety arrangements will be in operation and the companies have fully justified their request. Requests for individual exemptions are carefully considered on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report his formal responsibilities for health and safety on offshore oil installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend's responsibilities are set out, or provided for, in the following Acts:

(1) The Petroleum (Production) Act 1934.
(2) The Continental Shelf Act 1964.
(3) The Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971.
(4) The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 (as extended offshore by the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 (Application outside Great Britain) Order 1977 (S.I. 1977/1232)).
(5) The Petroleum and Submarine Pipelines Act 1975.
(6) The Petroleum Act 1987.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make regulations requiring any company operating offshore installations to ensure that all its employees who work on such installations have a basic minimum swimming proficiency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 imposes duties on employers to provide the necessary training for the health and safety of the work force.

Given the hostile environment of the North sea, experience has shown that emphasis must be placed on the use of survival systems, including life boats, life rafts, life jackets, immersion suits and standby vessels.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Morning Sittings

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list in the Official Report the dates when the House sat in the morning under Standing Order No. 10 for each session since 1967.

Mr. Wakeham: Under the provisions of a temporary Order of the House of 12 December 1967, and of Standing Order No. 10 (first made on 12 November 1968), sittings of the House were suspended until 10 am on the following occasions:

1967-68
26 February 1968
20 May 1968
27 May 1968
28 May 1968
29 May 1968
23 July 1968

1968-69
25 November 1968
16 December 1968
18 February 1969
19 February 1969
18 March 1969
24 March 1969
1 April 1969
29 April 1969
14 July 1969

The Standing Order has not been used on any subsequent occasions.

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list in the Official Report those private Members' Bills which received the Royal Assent, and which have not yet come into operation, since 1958.

Mr. Wakeham: No. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Airports (Traffic Congestion)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking with regard to the traffic congestion at Britain's airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Congestion has largely arisen from industrial action by overseas air traffic controllers, but some stems from inefficiencies in operating air traffic flow management across Europe. These are not matters within the control of the United Kingdom Government.

We have secured the following:

—Under the presidency of my noble Friend, the Minister for Aviation, Eurocontrol has accepted a package of measures to tackle European air congestion.

—With our strong encouragement, the Civil Aviation Authority has introduced equipment to make flow management work better, and continues to seek improvements in the system.

—We have changed the traffic distribution rules so charter operators have the opportunity to use spare capacity at Heathrow for their own or subchartered aircraft where that will help holidaymakers who would otherwise face hardship.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has also asked the CAA to report to him by November on strategies for making good use of air traffic control capacity in the LTMA in the period to 1995; and asked the CAA to advise him by July 1989 on the adequacy of airport capacity, taking account of air traffic control requirements in the period to 2005. We are keeping in close contact with the CAA on these matters.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest information he has regarding the building of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: From the frequent contacts between my Department and Eurotunnel conerning safety and other regulatory aspects of the construction of the tunnel and the recent receipt of Eurotunnel's first annual report submitted to the intergovernmental commission I understand that, although recent progress has been somewhat slower than earlier expected, Eurotunnel and the contractors continue to plan for commencement of operation in May 1993.

Copies of the annual report mentioned will shortly be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Driving Tests (Wrexham)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the Gatewen Department of Transport training centre, Llay, Wrexham is given sufficient driving test appointments for its trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Gatewen Training Ltd. has applied for block booking facilities for its trainees taking HGV driving tests at the Department's Wrexham test centre. The north-western traffic area office is making arrangements to meet Gatewen Training Ltd.'s requirements.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many examiners were in post at Gatewen training in 1980; what is the total currently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Gatewen Training Ltd. is a private HGV driver training organisation which presents trainees for driving tests at the Department of Transport's Wrexham test centre. The Wrexham test centre is now—and was in 1980—staffed by one examiner, who also occasionally conducts tests at Caernarfon. Additional examiners are made available from time to time as necessary to meet demand.

Driver Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of (a) training heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle drivers and (b) training an instructor to RTITB standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I cannot say. The Department of Transport does not train HGV/PSV drivers or driving instructors. The hon. Member may wish to contact the RTITB.

Roads

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he plans the existing backlog in motorway and trunk road renewal to be eliminated.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our aim has been 1992. We will consider the effect of rephasing capital maintenance works.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will complete his current review of the national road construction and maintenance programme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall be keeping the programme under review throughout the year.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, on completion of his review of the national road construction and maintenance programme, he will publish a revised programme of work for both new construction and maintenance work for 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall be keeping the programme under review throughout the year. For new construction, our aim remains to start all planned schemes which are ready.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends publishing a programme of new construction and maintenance work to be carried out on the motorway and trunk road network in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. In the normal way.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of his review of the national road construction and maintenance programme, he intends to maintain the commitment set out in his announcement of 22 March that 80 miles of motorway and over 200 miles of trunk roads will be renewed in 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member of Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 21 July.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the performance figures are for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre in recent years; and what its targets are for 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The DVLC has recently issued to all its staff a statement of its performance in a booklet entitled "The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre and its local offices—Facts and Figures 1987-88". I am placing copies in the Library.

The DVLC's performance record between 1984-85 and 1987-88 shows:

(i) an 11·5 per cent. growth in the volume of business handled with an 8·5 per cent. (5,571 to 5,107) reduction in numbers of staff employed;

(ii) a 10 per cent. reduction in unit costs per transaction (£1·49 to £1·34);

(iii) an improved turnround time for work at the centre—turnround has been reduced from 10 days to clear 90 per cent. of the driver and vehicle transactions received to six days for drivers and eight days over three quarters of the year for vehicles;

(iv) an improved record on the enforcement of vehicle excise duty—a 22 per cent. increase (290,000 to 355,000) in the number of effectively completed cases against evaders with an improved yield to cost ratio from 2·6:1 to 2·9:1.

The DVLC's main performance target for 1988-89 is to improve customer service while absorbing a continued 4 per cent. annual increase in workload and reducing unit costs still further by 2 per cent. in real terms. Turnround performance targets are to maintain drivers system performance at six days to clear 90 per cent. of the transactions received and to improve the vehicles system to eight days over the whole year.

Drivers, vehicle owners and taxpayers will wish to join me in congratulating all concerned on achievements in recent years.

Rear Seat Belts

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Rear Seat Belts by Children) Act 1988 will be brought into operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Act requires that the regulations which will give effect to the legislation have first to be approved by Parliament. We are drafting them. We shall consult widely in doing so.

No responsible parent would wait for the law before fitting and using child restraints. Advice, and a copy of the Department's leaflet "Protect your child in the Car", which we have recently revised, can be obtained by ringing our road safety hotline (Freephone 0800 234888). The Department will continue to press home to parents the message that the use of restraints saves children's lives.

Bus Levies (Germany)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what levies per metre are required to be paid by British passenger buses travelling in Germany; what is the purpose of these levies; to which authority they are paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 21 July 1988]: British coaches have to pay a levy of 0.7007 pfennigs per passenger kilometre for journeys made in the Federal Republic of Germany. The tax is collected by customs officials at the border. The aim is to impose on foreign operators a charge equivalent to the VAT levied on domestic passenger services.

Motorways (Traffic Flows)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the latest available 24-hour traffic flow data for each link of (a) the M1, (b) the M4 (in England), (c) the M6, (d) the M25 and (e) the M5.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I will write to the Hon. Member.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Children

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will lay before Parliament a report on all aspects of responsibilities for children together with relevant reports from the Departments of Education and Environment and the Home Office every three years.

Mrs. Currie: There are already three statutory reports presented to Parliament on children's services. These are (with details of most recent report published):

an annual consolidated and classified statistical abstract (Children in Care in England and Wales—March 1985: DHSS publication, February 1988), a triennial report on the exercise by local authorities of their functions in providing social services for children, and the provision by voluntary organisations of facilities for children (Social Services for Children in England and Wales 1982-84: December 1985—HoC 90), and a quinquennial report on the operation of the provisions of the Children Act 1975 (Children Act 1975—second report to Parliament: November 1984—HoC 20).

All are in the Library.

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his Department's policy towards the provision of long-stay hospital care for elderly people;

(2) what guidelines his Department gives to district and regional health authorities relating to the provision of long-stay hospital care for elderly people.

Mrs. Currie: Our policy is that the NHS has a responsibility to meet elderly people's need for long-term nursing care, either through hospital or community health services. This was reflected in the 1981 White Paper "Growing Older" and in subsequent annual planning guidelines issued to health authorities. This year's guidelines were issued on Tuesday 19 July. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Children in Care

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Government will bring forward proposals in new legislation about children in care to place local authorities under a duty to support young people leaving care in the manner of a good parent, following the changes in income support.

Mrs. Currie: Young people who are not living with their parents and who are in the care of a local authority immediately before they reach the age of 16 will be eligible to receive income support for a short period after leaving school. By the end of this period they will have been offered a YTS place. There is therefore no need to extend the duties of local authorities beyond the proposals on aftercare outlined in the White Paper "The Law on Child Care and Family Services" (Cm. 62) at paragraphs 32 and 33.

Social Fund Officers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific training (a) social fund officers and (b) social fund inspectors are receiving to assist them in implementing paragraph 1017 of the manual; and what proportion of total training hours this represents.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund officers receive formal training amounting to just over three weeks in total. It includes exercises on self-awareness and the effect of personal attitudes, bias and prejudice in the decision-making process.

I am advised by the social fund commissioner that social fund inspectors go through the same initial training programme as social fund officers. In addition, they attend a further one-week formal course arranged by the commissioner on their specific responsibilities as social fund inspectors. This training course focuses throughout on the principles of fair and balanced decision-making.

It is not possible to quantify what proportion of the total training time for SFOs and SFIs is devoted to assisting them in implementing paragraph 1017 of the social fund manual, because the considerations of bias an prejudice on the decision-making process is a continuous thread throughout the training period.

TVam (Lock-out)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been paid in unemployment and other benefits to members of the Association of Cinematograph Television and Allied Technicians locked out and subsequently dismissed by TVam; what were the grounds for (a) payment and (b) withholding of benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information on social security benefits is not kept according to current occupation of claimants.

Income Support

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has completed his review of income support for hostel dwellers.

Mr. Portillo: Hostel dwellers not in full-time work, like people in ordinary board and lodging accommodation, are helped by special rates of income support with accommodation costs as well as with other necessities and are not eligible for housing benefit. From next April, ordinary boarders will be eligible for housing benefit to help meet their lodging charges and normal income support to help with other costs.

We have reviewed the arrangements for hostel dwellers in the light of the changes affecting boarders, taking into account the reformed structure of the social security scheme. As part of the review the Department commissioned the Policy Studies Institute to find out more about hostels, their clientele, costs, sources of funding and services provided.

Our conclusion is that the present rules contain anomalies. They assume that hostel dwellers receive prepared meals from their landlords, whereas half do their own cooking. They place special limits on hostel charges which have little in common with the controls on housing benefit paid for normal rents, yet most hostel dwellers live in ordinary houses. They treat a small group of people as different from other claimants, when in fact the differences are not clear cut: for example, over half of hostel dwellers receiving income support are registering as available for work, and 80 per cent. of hostels provide no personal care for residents.

We are therefore issuing a consultation paper today to interested organisations inviting views on two alternative approaches to change. I have made arrangements for copies to be placed in the Library. The first proposal is to pay housing benefit and normal income support to all hostel dwellers from April 1989. The second proposal would limit any changes to the majority of hostel dwellers who receive no substantial personal care from the hostel. Neither proposal would apply to hostels registered as residential care homes.

Comments on the proposals are requested by 23 September.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the public expenditure arising from (a) moving from supplementary benefits to income support, (b) the original transitional protection arrangements and (c) the further additional transitional protection arrangements announced on 27 April.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates of the information requested are (a) £220 million higher than if supplementary benefit had continued with a normal uprating, (b) rather more than £200 million, and (c) the additional income support and housing benefit transitional protection could amount to £100 million.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of telephones, personal aids, adaptations and holidays provided by local authority social services departments for people with disabilities in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: Figures for 1987, the latest year for which data are available, are shown in the table. For local authorities which did not provide information, the latest available data for those authorities are used.

Cases of assistance to persons by local authority social services departments in England—Year ended 31 March 1987

	Number
Communication equipment
Installation of:
Telephones	14,811
Attachments	3,772
Payment of telephone rentals	99,548
Other	6,098
Television
Supply and installation	768
Licence fees or rentals	5,441
Supply of radios	1,320
Other personal aids	448,130
Adaptations to dwellings
Non-local authority property	76,359
Local authority property	17,399
Holidays	56,610

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current number of registered disabled people in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: The latest available information on the numbers of persons registered as disabled with local authorities in England is in the table. Figures for the rest of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

Number of persons with disabilities registered with local authority social services departments (England)

Type of disability	[1] Year	All persons
Physically disabled (general classes)	1984	1,107,708
Blind or partically sighted	1986	191,652
Deaf or hard of hearing	1986	97,431

[1] All figures as at 31 March.

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current total number of people receiving rate rebates who (a) are and (b) are not registered disabled people.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not collected centrally.

Physiological Measurement Grades

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to re-evaluate the physiological measurement grades by taking account of the introduction of new technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The pay and grade structure of physiological measurement technicians are for negotiation in the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council. It is for that council to determine the need to review the grades of any of its staff groups.

Drugs

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the estimated number of deaths caused from the use of illegal drugs, alcohol and tobacco.

Mrs. Currie: The available data are shown in the tables.

Table 1 shows the number of deaths registered in 1987[1] in England and Wales with an underlying cause of death stated as drug dependence or non-dependent abuse of drugs.

It is not possible from death registrations to identify reliably which of these deaths were due to the use of illegal drugs.

Table 1
Deaths from drug dependence and non-dependent abuse of drugs

Table 2 shows the number of deaths registered in 1987[1] in England and Wales assigned to underlying causes of death due to diseases associated with alcohol consumption.

Table 2
Number of deaths associated with alcohol consumption

ICD code[2]	Main diagnosis	Number of deaths
291	Alcoholic psychoses	15
303	Alcoholic dependence syndrome	115

In addition, statistics collated by the Department of Transport indicate that in 1986 in Great Britain there were 5,000 deaths or serious injuries on the roads where the driver or rider subsequently failed a roadside breath test.

For smoking it is not possible to be precise. Most deaths associated with cigarette smoking arise from three diseases: lung cancer, chronic bronchitis and "heart attacks" due to obstruction of the arteries of the heart. However, the proportion of deaths attributable to smoking is also implicated in certain other conditions where no estimate of the numbers of the deaths caused by smoking is available—for example, obstruction of the arteries of the lower limbs, and strokes.

It is estimated that at least 90 per cent. of deaths from cancers of the lung, lip, oesophagus and larynx, and 90 per cent. of deaths from chronic bronchitis, obstructive lung disease, chronic pulmonary heart disease and aortic aneurysm are attributable to smoking. The total number of deaths from these conditions involved is given in table 3.

Table 3
England and Wales—1987[1]

ICD code[2]	Cause of death	Number of deaths
Malignant neoplasm
162	Trachea, bronchus and lung	35,138
140-149	Lip, oral cavity and pharynx	1,689
150	Oesophagus	4,770
161	Larynx	866
Diseases of the circulatory system
416	Chronic pulmonary heart disease	680
441	Aortic aneurysm	7,844
Diseases of the respiratory system
490-492	Bronchitis and emphysema	9,821
496	Chronic airways obstruction, not elsewhere classified	15,175

[2] International Classification of Diseases 9th revision.

In 1983 the Royal College of Physicians in its report "Health or Smoking" estimated that perhaps 20 per cent. of deaths due to obstruction of the arteries of the heart were related to smoking. The medical term for this condition is "ischaemic heart disease" but it is commonly referred to as "coronary heart disease". The total number of deaths from this condition for England and Wales in 1987 is as follows:

ICD code[1]	Cause of death	Number of deaths
410-414	Ischaemic heart disease	155,235

[1] International Classification of Diseases 9th revision.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total expenditure on programmes aimed at reducing the use of (a) illegal drugs, (b) alcohol and (c) tobacco.

Mrs. Currie: The provision of services for drug and alcohol misusers is primarily the responsibility of health and local authorities. Information is not centrally available on authorities' expenditure from their normal allocations on these services, nor on expenditure on tobacco-related programmes. However, the Government made available £6,235,000 to health authorities in England in 1987-88 specifically for the development of drug misuse services.

Central expenditure in 1987-88 on programmes aimed at reducing the misuse of drugs and alcohol, and the use of tobacco, was as shown in the following table.

Drug Misuse
Central funding initiative (pump-priming grants to develop local services)	4,046,680
Grants to national voluntary organisations	534,091
Drug prevention and anti-injecting publicity	5,200,000
	9,780,771
Alcohol Misuse
Grants to voluntary organisations	553,756
Smoking
Grants to voluntary organisations	200,000
Publication of tar and nicotine levels	16,200
	216,200

In addition, the Health Education Authority spent £1,135,903 on tobacco-related programmes and £496,000 on drug and alcohol misuse programmes in 1987-88.

Hernia Repairs and Hip Replacements

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of hernia repairs and hip replacement operations performed in each region, each year, since 1974 to the latest date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available centrally, without incurring disproportionate costs, as soon as possible.

Kidney Disease

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the proportion of patients with terminal kidney disease treated by (a) transplant and (b) dialysis; and what are the comparable figures in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and European Economic Community countries.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the number of patients treated by kidney transplants and dialysis in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries listed has been provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association. The figures, which relate to the position on 31 December 1986, are as follows:

All patients on renal replacement therapy

Country	Percentage on all forms of dialysis	Percentage with a functioning transplant
Austria	71	29
Belgium	67	33
Denmark	59	41
Federal Republic of Germany	85	15
Finland	37	63
France	76	24
Greece	85	15
Iceland	50	50
Ireland	44	56
Italy	88	12
Luxembourg	72	28
Netherlands	56	44
Norway	22	78
Portugal	92	8
Spain	77	23
Sweden	45	55
Switzerland	57	43
Turkey	71	29
United Kingdom	50	50

Statistics are not held centrally for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Sugar in Diet

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report of the sub-panel of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Health, COMA, on the effects of sugar in diet.

Mrs. Currie: We hope to receive the report from the expert panel on sugars in the diet set up by the chief medical officer's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) early in the new year.

Incomes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate for each year since 1979 the number of people in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales who had incomes (i) below, (ii) at and, (iii) up to 140 per cent. of the income support or supplementary benefit level on the latest basis and on a basis comparable with 1979; what percentage of the population they represented in each case; what is his estimate of the number of children living in such households; and what percentage of total children they represent in each;

(2) how many children for each year since 1979 in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales were living in families (i) below, (ii) at and (iii) up to 140 per cent. of income support or supplementary benefit level, classified by employment status; whether they were in one or two-parent families on the latest basis, and on a basis comparable with 1979; what proportion of these children made up the total number of children; and whether they were in families of one, two, three, four or more children.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 May, at columns 413-414, and to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 21 June, at column 546.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing (a) individuals and (b) children below various percentiles of the income distribution by family status and economic status in 1981, 1983 and 1985 both before and after housing costs from "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis."

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 June 1988]: A note has been put in the Library.

Maternity Services (Fund Raising)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the total number of working hours spent by each regional health authority director of maternity services on fund raising or income generation;

(2) what is the number of maternity staff involved in fund raising or income generation; and how many hours maternity service staff have spent on fund raising in each district health authority;

(3) how much of his total budget he expects to be spent on seminar and study days for maternity staff; and by how much each district health authority is having to supplement its allocation for this purpose by money raised through its own fund raising and income generation.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available. We have advised health authorities that income-generation activities should not interfere with their duty to provide services under the National Health Service Act 1977, and we intend that they should ensure that there is no unnecessary diversion of management or staff time. Levels of spending on seminars and study days are a matter for individual health authorities from within their general allocations.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the losses to (a) families and (b) other claimants, giving details of the number of both claimants and dependants for the changeover to income support and the change in housing benefit rules in April, taking into account all the protection measures; and if he will give the numbers transitional losses of (i) up to £2 a week, (ii) £2 to £4 a week, (iii) £4 to £6 a week, (iv) £6 to £8 a week, (v) £8 to £10 a week and over £10 a week.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Primary Health Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a further statement on how he plans to finance the changes in primary health care set out in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health".

(2) if he will make a further statement on his plans to introduce charges for eye tests and dental checks.

Mr. Moore: The discussions in the other place have produced no new arguments in relation to our proposals for sight tests and the dental examination charge. We remain of the view that it is right that those who can afford to should contribute towards the cost of sight tests and dental examinations. Our proposals rightly exempt those whose circumstances are such that they cannot afford to pay. We do not accept that those who are not exempt will be deterred from seeking treatment. The proposals were part of a package which would make a significant contribution to improvement in primary health care.

Audiology Technicians

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why audiology technicians are not paid on PTA scales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why audiology technicians are not included in a pay review body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Audiology technicians are graded as physiological measurement technicians (PMTs—audiology) whose pay is for negotiation in the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council. PMTs (audiology) do not satisy all the criteria drawn up at the time the review body structure was established.

Childhood Cancer

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what independent research has been or is being undertaken by or for his Department into instances of child cancers in the age ranges (a) 0 to 15 years and (b) 15 to 24 years throughout the United Kingdom and particularly in Humberside; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: In relation to childhod cancer, United Kingdom health departments have funded, or have agreed in principle to take forward, recommendations 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the independent advisory group report "Investigation of the Possible Increased Incidence of Cancer in West Cumbria" (Her Majesty's Stationery Office 1984). and recommendations 1, 2, 3 and 8 of the second COMARE report "Investigation of the possible increased incidence of leukaemia in young people near the Dounreay Nuclear Establishment, Caithness, Scotland" (Her Majesty's Stationery Office 1988). Copies of both reports are in the Library. In addition, the Department's directly commissioned research programme includes:

(i) the maintenance of the national registry of childhood cancer at the childhood cancer research group, Oxford university. The group is also in receipt of joint funding from this Department and the National Radiological Protection Board for the further development of the national medical statistical databases for childhood cancers in Great Britain.

(ii) a case control study of childhood cancers in west Berkshire and Basingstoke and north Hampshire.

In relation to Humberside, the East Yorkshie health authority commissioned a report (Report on childhood cancer aggregation in the Beverley and Kingston-upon-Hull administrative districts) earlier this year on the incidence of childhood cancers in certain areas in the east Yorkshire borough of Beverley, and the city of Hull. This report has recently been published and is being studied by the Department.

"Public Health in England"

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Government are now in a position to announce their response to the report "Public Health in England", Cm. 289.

Mr. Moore: The report "Public Health in England" (Cm. 289) was published on 14 January 1988. Its recommendations affect central Government, health and local authorities and other statutory and voluntary bodies.

The Government have accepted the principle the report advances of a greater commitment to improving the public health. The following steps are being taken at this stage to the report's recommendations.

New guidance is being given to health authorities based on the report's conclusions about their responsibilities to improve the health of the population, including the prevention, surveillance and control of communicable disease. This guidance will also ask authorities to arrange for the publication of an annual report on the health of the public to be prepared by their director of public health.

The capacity of the public health laboratory service and the communicable disease surveillance centre to provide specialist help to health authorities is being strengthened. My Department is also taking forward the report's recommendations to review the present system for the notification of communicable diseases and the scope for bringing public health legislation up to date.

Thirdly, a small multi-disciplinary unit within the Department of Health and Social Security is being set up to monitor and analyse information about the health of the population and to provide an improved epidemiological input at the centre.

In the longer term, the implementation of this strategy will depend on an adequate supply of appropriate trained manpower. The main professional bodies concerned are being asked to consider and act on those of the report's recommendations which relate to education and training in the public health field.

The application of the report outside England is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps will be taken to ensure that in cases where, as a result of the chief commissioner's finding in decision CSB/783/1987 that the term "adult" means aged 18 years or over, it appears that supplementary benefit may have been underpaid or single payments for washing machines wrongly refused, the relevant decisions are reviewed and the appropriate payments made, including transitional additions to income support.

Mr. Portillo: The implications of the decision, which was made on 10 June 1988, are currently under consideration by the office of the chief adjudication officer. I cannot at this point say whether and, if so, when, the guidance of the chief adjudication officer will be amended.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards promoting equal opportunities between employees of different sexes and ethnic origin in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The National Health Service is an equal opportunities employer. To assist employing authorities in promoting equality of opportunity we have established the national steering group on equal opportunities for women in the National Health Service. The group has issued practical guidance on recruitment and selection procedures and on the monitoring and evaluation of equal opportunities policies. We expect to receive its summary report later this year. The Department also supports the King's Fund task force on racial equality in the National Health Service which was established to accelerate the achievement of equal opportunities for ethnic minorities. We have commended to authorities the task force's model policy, published in July 1987.

Nursing Grades

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent National Health Service managers are using cost as a means of determining nursing grades; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The guidance which has been issued to health authorities makes it clear that posts should be graded in accordance with the agreed grading definitions.

Private Hospitals (Contracts)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities and special health authorities which have entered into contractual arrangements with private hospitals or clinics during 1987-8; and if he will give details of the costs to each district health authority, the type of treatment given, and the number of patients involved in each of the arrangements.

Mrs. Currie: Information about patients treated under contractual arrangements for 1987-88 will be available in the autumn.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish any advice given to regional district or special health authorities about contracting out the management of pay beds or private patients sections to independent hospital companies.

Mrs. Currie: Guidance on contractual arrangements between health authorities and independent hospitals and nursing homes and on other forms of co-operation between the National Health Service and the independent medical sector is contained in health circular HC(81)1, issued to health authorities in January 1981. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities and special health authorities which have contracted out the management of their pay beds to independent hospital companies.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give details of each successful bid from the national initiative to cut waiting lists during 1988-89; and if he will list separately each successful bid involving the treatment of patients under contract at a private hospital or clinic;

(2) if any strategic decision was taken to ensure that a percentage of the sum set aside for the national initiative to reduce waiting lists was spent at private hospitals or clinics; and what criteria were used to judge bids from district health authorities or special health authorities for money from the national initiative;

(3) if he will place in the Library the complete list of successful bids from district health authorities and regional health authorities for money allocated by the national initiative; if he will publish a list of all those projects which involve the treatment of patients in private hospitals or clinics; if he will aggregate the amount of money being paid to private hospitals and clinics for this treatment; and if his Department had earmarked a proportion of the total sum to be spent in the private sector.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 28 March 1988]: Schedules of the projects funded from the £30 million waiting list fund in the current financial year have been placed in the Library. The projects listed in the table involve some use of the independent sector. The cost of these projects will be £2·46 million. No part of the waiting list fund was earmarked for any particular type of project.

Health authorities were asked, when formulating their programmes, to concentrate on tackling excessive waiting, particularly for serious or disabling conditions, and, in doing so, to look at all available sources of health care, including use of spare capacity in other health authorities, service hospitals or the independent sector. Selection and funding of individual district projects was the responsibility of regional health authorities.

Life Expectation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current expectation of life for (a) men and (b) women at the age of 45 years in (i) England and Wales, (ii) all European Econonic Community countries and (iii) Scandinavian countries; and what were the comparable figures for 1979.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 July]: Available information is given in the table. Statistics for countries other than the United Kingdom and England and Wales are taken from "The United Nations Demographic Yearbook", and give the latest figures from that source, together with those closest to 1979.

THE ARTS

Thyssen-Bornemisza Collection

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the Government has received a reply to its proposal for the future of the Thyssen-Bornemisza collection.

Mr. Luce: The trustees of the Thyssen-Bornemisza Collections Trust have informed the Government that they have decided not to pursue the British proposal at the present time. Baron Thyssen-Bornemisza has entered into preliminary accord with the Spanish Government which is intended to lead to a loan of most of the collection for display in Madrid for a period of up to 10 years. The trustees have decided to try to achieve a full agreement with the Spanish Government along those lines. In these circumstances, Her Majesty's Government have withdrawn their proposal. The Government have said that, should circumstances change and the trustees approach the Government about a long-term location in the United Kingdom, we would be ready to look at the matter afresh.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 137

SESSION 1987–88

11th July–22nd July 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
